LOOK WHAT GAS IS DOING NOW!

Because it's Gas, this CHRYSLER Lo-Boy furnace gives wonderful warmth without waste— air-purifier insures your better health!

Did you know that in some areas of the country, thousands of families are on waiting lists to get Gas heat? They know a Gas-heated home is cleaner, quieter, always more comfortable. They like that "fresh-air" heat. They know nothing could be more automatic. Gas is piped in automatically—no getting up to a freezing house because a delivery man couldn't get through, or there's "trouble" somewhere. Dollar for dollar, no other heat gives so much comfort, efficiency, and steady service as Gas heat. Wonderful as it is, Gas heat saves you money. It costs less to install, far less to use, and far, far less for service (what can break down about a flame?) Why should you pay more to get less than Gas heat gives?

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

CHRYSLER AIRTEMP

AIR PURIFIER can be included in your Chrysler Lo-Boy Gas furnace when it is installed, or added at any time in the future. It traps even the tiniest dirt particles electrostatically, to keep the air your family breathes pure. Ultra-violet rays kill airborne bacteria and germs—keep colds from spreading. Activated charcoal filter soaks up cigarette smoke, cooking odors, even choking smog!

CONTOUR FLAME HEATING, a Chrysler exclusive, takes full advantage of the efficiency of Gas heat. Flame is shielded so nothing can clog burner—it never needs cleaning. Flame is spread over the most efficient shape, matching the heat exchanger but not touching it, concentrated at the bottom where it does the most good. And because Gas burns completely, there's no waste, ever.

Install a new Gas Heating System Now!

ONLY GAS heats so much better...for less!

The Hammond Spinet Organ. $1350, F.O.B. Chicago

What is a Hammond Organ?

...it is a step across the room into a world more relaxed than the real one ...a place where fun and friends and music mix happily together.

The most important thing about the Hammond Organ is that you can play it.

For Hammond invented the modern organ in the first place in the belief that the joy and relaxation of playing it belong not just to a few—but to everyone.

Yes, you can play it. And, just as important—you can own it. For Hammond has made it possible for you to bring any Hammond Organ home for only $25 down.* With low monthly payments.

You have many wonderful models to choose from. Like the famous Hammond Spinet... the organ with Harmonic Drawbars for simplified tone selection... and the only organ that can never go out of tune.

You can play it, you can own it! See your Hammond dealer.

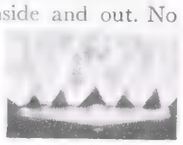
KitchenAid
THE DEPENDABLE DISHWASHER

gets you ready on time



You're always ready for guests when you have a KitchenAid dishwasher. You greet guests relaxed. Here's how KitchenAid helps:

Washes perfectly. No pre-rinsing. Connects easily—load it and leave it. Soil is "scrubbed" away by KitchenAid's exclusive power-wash action with filter-clean wash and rinse water.

Dries sparkling bright, the way you like, with KitchenAid's exclusive flowing, sanitized hot air. No crazing—safe, even for your delicate china.

Dependable, built to last. Durable porcelain enamel inside and out. No installation costs. And service calls are a rarity. There's a KitchenAid for every kitchen—portable or built-in.

See the Yellow Pages for your nearest dealer or write KitchenAid Home Dishwasher Division, The Hobart Manufacturing Company, Dept. KH, Troy, Ohio. (In Canada, write Hobart, 175 George St., Toronto 2.)

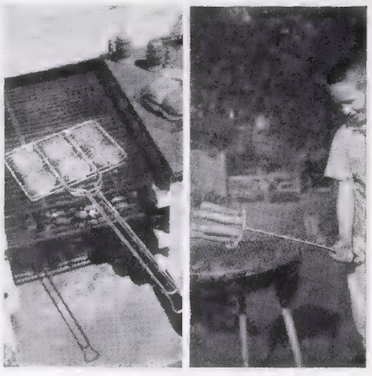
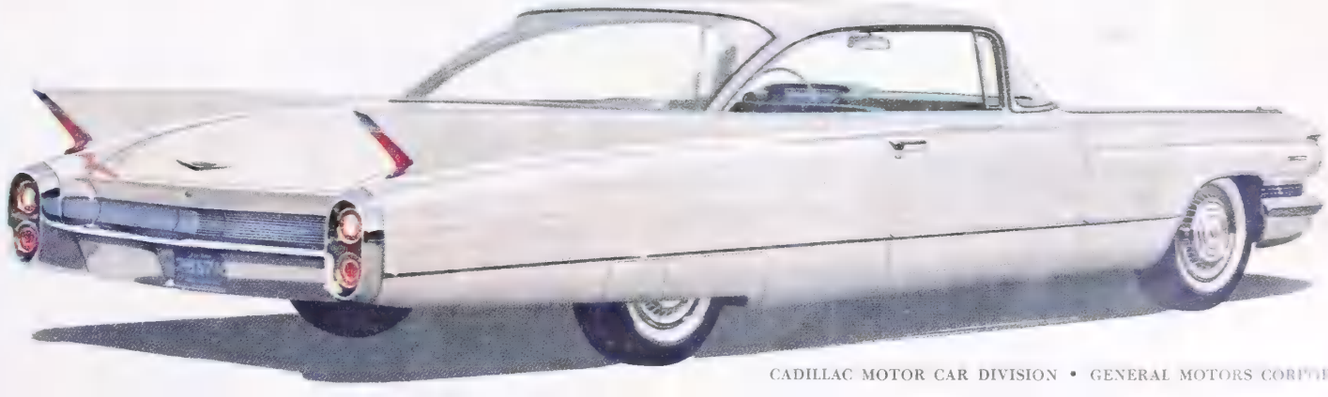
Underwater light for above-ground pools hangs on U-arm (18″) locked to side wall's outer structure; the transformer is remotely installed wherever you will. Pool-Brite's 12-volt light is harmless; transformer is grounded. Wire supplied (45′) has vinyl insulation; $29.95 with 34,000 candlepower, seal beam bulb. For round pools only; illuminates up to 28-foot diameter. Spencer Rubber Products, Manchester, Conn.



All gardening needs carry as one in Yardboy. Bin hauls fertilizer or the like to its destination; emptied, it collects leaves and other debris. Rear basket holds small tools and supplies. Long-handle tools held by built-in rack can stay put when cart is folded and hung for storage. Cart alone hauls refuse cans, etc. All steel, very strong. Coppertone finish. Pneumatic, 7″ tires; $14.95. Hammacher, Schlemmer, N.Y.C. 22.

This device, RP Spot Soaker, dispenses hose flow through aluminum-foil mesh. Myriad droplets ooze from hood's "pores"; the cascade, gently dispensed even when hose is on full force, rapidly saturates the ground at deep level. The effective action is ideal for transplanting, new plantings; for concentrated watering of tree or shrub roots, saturating "brown" lawn spots; $1.49. Walter Drake, 3502 Drake Bldg., Colo. Springs, Colo.

Rotating Hot-Dog Roaster by Androck, cooks six "franks" at a clip; a hand-crank turns the holder unit evenly, exposing all meat surfaces to firebed. Chromed steel, wood handle, $1.49. The 3-compartment broiler basket holds 6 hamburgers in recessed niches which keep content "unsqueezed." A flip of the handle turns entire load. Size 9″ x 14″, ½″ mesh; $3.50. From Washburn Co., Worcester 8, Mass.



Five stacking pans carry ready-to-eat meal or the makings; vinyl bag adds fiber-glass insulation which preserves raw perishables; keeps hot or cold foods at initial temperature-level for hours. Polished aluminum pans carry, serve, cook; cover fits all. Bail clamp binds stacked unit. Capacity suffices for 6 to 8 persons. Complete Buckeye Picnic-Pak, $12.95; from Sleepy Hollow Gifts, 1037 Crane Drive, Falls Church, Va.

Gowns for mother and daughter designed expressly for Cadillac by Anne Fogarty

The ladies who ride in Cadillacs appreciate those extra touches of luxury that surround them in the "cars of cars". There is its wonderful interior spaciousness, for instance . . . the soft buoyancy of its seat cushions . . . its generous center arm rest . . . windows that operate with a touch . . . individual ash receivers and lighters . . . and those wide-opening doors that make entering and exiting the most graceful of motions. In company with the car's many other virtues, they make a journey in a new Cadillac the most luxurious distance between any two points.

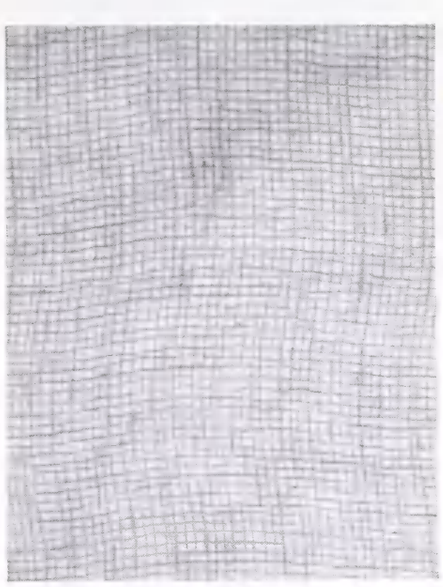
"They used to call it a rumpus room," said Mrs. Porter, shaking her meticulously-marceled white head, "and I swore I'd never have one in the house. When my girls were growing up I saw no reason why they couldn't entertain in the drawing room—that's what it was for."

At this point, I shook my head, for I'd always wondered exactly what a drawing room was for—besides the sanctification of dowagers like my current client, who was bred to the tapestry bell-pull and tea at five.



"Did they dance?" I asked. "Right on these oriental rugs?"

"Of course they danced—but there was none of that cha-cha. We had no such violence in people's homes in those days. But I suspect I am incapable of turning back the clock. What I need now is your help to make this old donjon-keep more attractive to my great-grandchildren."

She did have a problem, this imposing old gentlewoman whose age no one dared murmur even behind closed doors. Owing to her family's tradition of foreign service and their complicated set of international domiciles, she had more or less inherited her two daughters' teen-age grandchildren—at least while they were in the U.S.A. for preparatory school and college. There were four of them—two girls, two boys—ensconced in schools in New England, but this old turreted stone castle on the Hudson River was home base where they were supposed to return for week ends and holidays.

Mrs. Porter is one of the few people left who can afford to live in the incredibly mannerly 19th-century manner. Hers is still a world of sachet-scented linen sheets and silver-handled dresser sets, of breakfast trays and dressing for dinner. She has every right

WE'RE TERRY BOOSTERS. We like the way it soaks up water like a thirsty sponge. We love the way it washes and dries, soft and comfortable. And we're mad about the way it looks with a golden tan. One-piece dry-off or playsuit with an adjustable belt is brass-buttoned, comes in maize, aqua, pink, and white. 10-16, $9.95. Order from Miller's, 4877 E. Speedway, Tucson, Arizona.

SPARKLE SACKS are the gayest glowers that ever lighted a summer evening. You just fill the pretty pink, green or white perforated paper bags half-way with sand, plant them with a candle and they line driveway, pool or patio with light. Wind can't unseat them though their price is a breezy 12 for $1. With candles, $1.95. Artisan Galleries, 2100 N. Haskell Ave., Dallas 4, Texas.

BUY GUM, IT'S SUGARLESS and so are the peppermints. So if you're shedding a few pounds for the sunbathing season, these are for you. And of course they're absolutely perfect for the sugar- or salt-restricted diets. Peppermints, 20-10¢ rolls, $1.75; 20-10¢ gum packs, $1.75. 20 of ea., $3.25. From the foremost maker of dietetic sweets. Estee, HB7, 42 Jumel Pl., N.Y.C. 32.

HAVE ORIGINAL PAINTINGS IN YOUR HOME?

More and more distinctive homes are using original art. Would you like more information on how to evaluate and select art for your home? Our exciting new booklet, BUYING ART FOR THE HOME, brings you a better understanding of all art, answers the question of "how much to pay," and gives you new courage in hanging your choice of paintings.

Written by Edward B. Blaine, BUYING ART FOR THE HOME is published by the nation's strongest organization of artist-painters, America's Artists in Particular. It is profusely illustrated (including many full-color pages) and clearly written. It tells you how you can shop the nation, from your living room, for original paintings in the style, and price range you prefer.

Order your copy today! BUYING ART FOR THE HOME may enrich your life forever. Please include $1 to cover costs.

Regal as the splendor of imperial Rome...

Amtico TRAVERTINE Vinyl

Classic as a Roman column . . . yet new as the decade it will grace so distinctively. Amtico Travertine* Vinyl captures the full drama of travertine marble, its stately look, muted tone, its very texture. In a room of any period, Amtico Travertine Vinyl adds magnificent significance with subtle sophistication . . . on floors, walls, stairs, decorative devices, furniture surfaces.

Amtico Travertine Vinyl performs patrician magic so practically . . . with infinitely more economy, more resilience underfoot than natural travertine. Much lighter in weight, yet wears far longer. Amtico Travertine is so much easier to install and so effortless to maintain . . . should never be waxed.

Delight in the plans you can devise with Amtico Travertine Vinyl Flooring . . . and Amtico's complete line of fine floorings including renowned Renaissance®.

HOME POOL VACUUM

A find for cleaning "back-yard" swimming pools. Operated solely by water pressure from any garden hose. Vacuum travels under water removing sand, pebbles, algae, debris, leaves. Moreover, this vacuuming action adds fresh water to pool. To drain pool, replace bag with hose, vacuum becomes a pump channelling water to flower beds or sewers. Long 6 ft. handle reaches most anywheres.

KILLS FLIES on Contact

WORKS FOR ENTIRE SEASON!

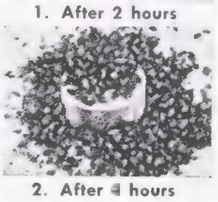
Better, Safer Than Sprays, Bombs, Fly Paper!



Now, quick death to disease-bearing flies with amazing new FLY CAKE! Perfected scientific discovery attracts flies like a magnet, kills them instantly. No fuss, no mess. Simply place moistened Fly Cake where flies tend to accumulate. Just 4 Fly Cakes equal the control power of 100 or more aerosol bombs because these new, solid chemical cakes give complete, unvarying protection for so long. Fly Cake's unique death-dealing power works on roaches, ants, too. Lasts for an entire season—as long as cake is intact.

Common sprays or aerosols disperse their poisons in all directions throughout living areas. Fly Cake's special insect-destroying chemicals are safely sealed within a solid cake—can't taint food, clothing, furniture. Pets are not attracted to Fly Cake, and it is not harmful if touched or even tasted by humans.

1. After 2 hours

2. After 4 hours

Actual photographs taken in dairy barn demonstrate FLY CAKE'S remarkable effectiveness.

works where DDT fails

Evidence reveals certain flies have built-up resistance to DDT. Fly Cake kills them dead! Acts in 5 seconds to paralyze insects' nervous system, destroys them on the spot. Flies need not eat cake—merely lighting on it puts an end to them!

DON'T LU-CITE of these when sticky summer weather rolls around. Moistureproof, non-clog salt and pepper shakers from Germany have a new spiked miracle top that automatically springs shut. Made of clear lucite with white plastic tops, the pair would be a nice gift to take to your luncheon hostess. $1.50 a pair. Two pair, $2.50. Seth and Jed, HB7, New Marlborough, Mass.

BAREFOOT BUY. Footprints are disposable bath mats of white absorbent paper with a stunning sea-horse design in black, pink, and gray. Many-purpose beauties are non-skid, even dry for re-use. Think of them for the tub, shower, guest room. And order a supply for your summer cottage, 14½" x 20¾", set of 24. $2.95; 2 sets, $5.50. Mr. Shaw, 214 W. Ontario St., Chicago 10, Illinois.

IT'S BEEN AGES since we've seen a more interesting set of wall plaques. The Four Seasons of man's life from childhood to later years are delineated in exceptional detail. Cast in Hydra-Cal in antique ivory tones, they measure 4½" wide each, come with no-mar adhesive for hanging and re-hanging. Set of 4, $3.98 from Deer Hill Co., Dept. HB7, Flushing 52, New York.

COUNTRY STYLE. If your house is along an RFD route, it's the mail box that creates the first impression. So we think you'll like this weatherproof box of natural redwood with your name and number in big white letters deepcut by hand into both sides. And if you're a city dweller, it's a bird house. 22 x 8 x 6", $12.95. Signsville, 4016 Albright Ave., Los Angeles 66, Calif.

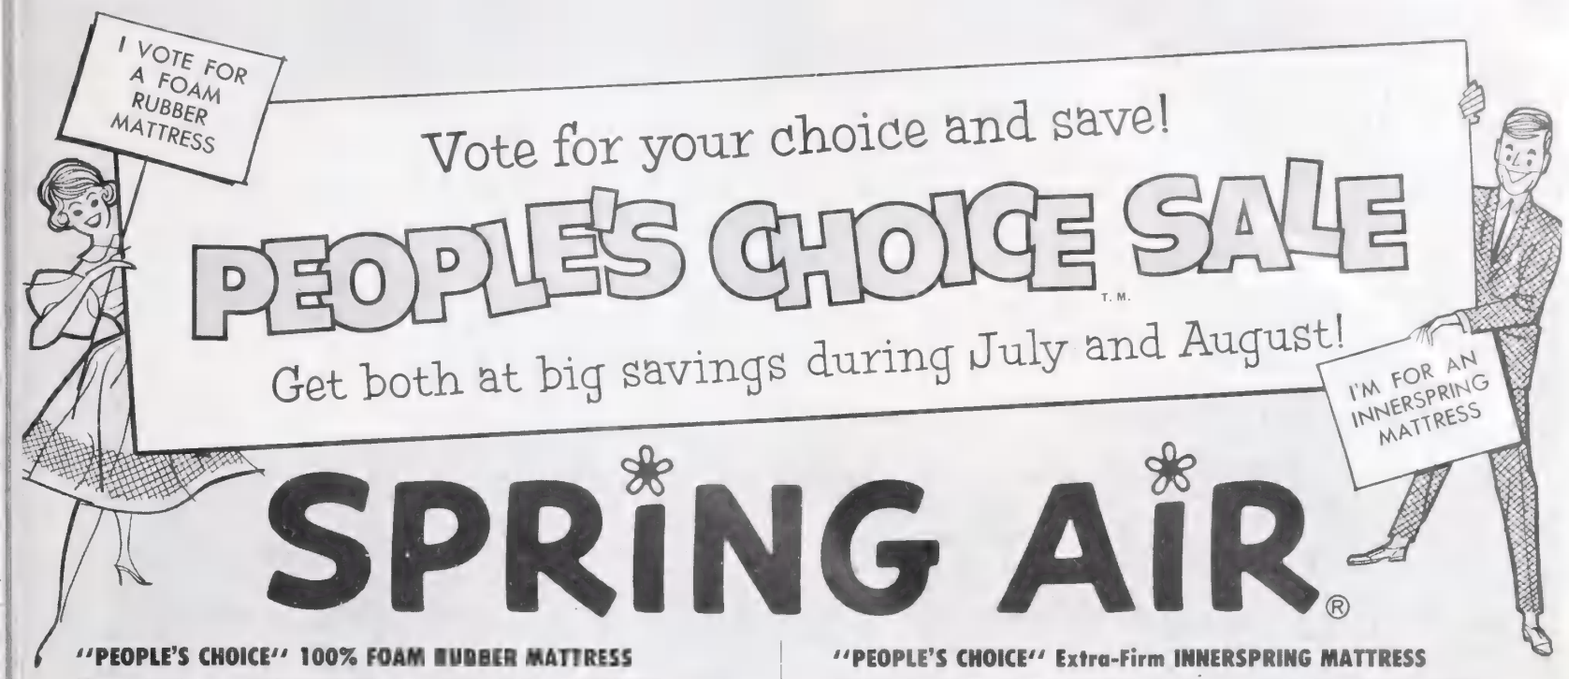
to her butler's pantry because she also has a butler—and a housekeeper, and a secretary, to name a few of her retainers.

The kids are breezy 20th-century products, if anything a little more sophisticated than most of their contemporaries. And my guess is that they couldn't be more frightening to their gallant relative if they were little green Martians.

Her object was to give them an entertainment center of their own in the midst of this well-mannered, old-fashioned decorum. She wanted them to love it so much that they'd make a bee-line back to the roof-tree on every possible occasion, preferably bringing their friends.

The cobwebby basement billiard room was designated to be opened up again, refurbished, and equipped with stereo, TV, table tennis, and such divertisements as usually charm the young. Since I knew the budget was unlimited and Mrs. Porter's heart big, I put in a successful pitch for a soda fountain, which if I were a teen-ager I'd consider as dreamy an appurtenance as could be dreamed up in a month of butterscotch-almond sundaes. And since the room was next to a service pantry of sorts (with a sink and a dumb-waiter connection to the main kitchen upstairs), it was easy enough to provide the kids with an electric grill and coffee maker for their own short-order refreshments.



The big problem here wasn't budget. It was how to overcome the gloom. The room was semi-subterranean, with its high small windows on the level with the ground outside. Billiard players apparently don't need daylight, as long as the table is well illuminated by those hanging green glass lamps. The wall covering was burgundy burlap, on its last legs and even hanging loosely in spots, which drew my attention to the condition of the walls. They were cement-and-plaster finished and seemed dry enough, but I knew they must be prone to the sneaky kind of moisture that threatens all below-grade walls.

This, plus the fact that whatever covered the walls had to be as light in color as possible and as tough as nails to take the inevitable horseplay of a recreation room, sent me to the catalogs looking for some sort of miracle wall covering. What I found is no miracle, and makes no claim to be, but it coped with the problem like magic. It's Polyplastex's new wall covering called "Royaltex," a virtual sandwich of materials that is resistant to hard knocks and moisture, a lamination of fabric, aluminum foil, and "Krene" vinyl plastic film, with a paper backing so it can be hung on a plaster wall just like conventional wallpaper. But what you mightn't expect of such utilitarian performance is its attractive appearance. Its design is part of the lamination, and its 20 patterns are actually created by real fabrics like grasscloth, jute, metallic weaves, and can even be embellished with real grasses, sea heather, leaves, butterflies, which keep their natural color. You can get all sorts of textural effects without worrying about fragility or dust-catching potential because the top surface is vinyl film, practically invisible, but tough and scrubbable. The stuff comes by the sheet, 8 feet long, 2 feet wide, costs from 34 cents to 65 cents a square foot depending upon the elaboracy of the pattern.

We chose a pattern called "Tobago," a lamination of a loose square weave of natural jute against a white ground. It has brightened the room like sunshine. It is also said to have some sound-deadening properties, which Mrs. Porter assures me she hasn't particularly noticed, but admits that it would be a miracle indeed that could cut down the decibel count of the delegations of young who have been showing up every weekend since the room was finished.

No one likes to admit to the cadging of ideas, but it does seem a shame not to use a good suggestion when it hits you in the eye. For example, in decorator William Pahlmann's own Manhattan apartment three perfect solutions to other people's problems stared me in the face. It would have been unfair to Mrs. Jonathan not to copy the bookcase door, between the Pahlmann study and the guest room, when she has precisely the same situation crying for treatment. Built-in bookshelves in her living room are separated by a door to a bedroom. Since the bookshelves are built out, the door looks as if it were sunk in a niche. What better way to cope than to even out the wall by putting matching shelves on the door itself, thus improving the room's appearance and creating an extra spate of shelving? This calls for a rehanging of the door, of course, strengthening the hinges to take the extra load. And it is just as well to put lightweight, unbreakable objects and small books on the door-shelves, just in case anyone gets huffy and slams the door too strenuously.

Mrs. Bates may not know it but she now enjoys a cozier upstairs sitting room in her high-ceilinged house because I took note of the Pahlmann method of lowering the ceiling in his Empire guest room. A false ceiling was created with a striped fabric, stretched so that the stripes radiate from the center of the room to the sides. A devilish job of mitering and fitting, but in this Napoleonic room it gives the most appropriate aspect of an elegant campaign tent. Mrs. Bates, whose tastes are less Bonapartean, has the principle executed in yellow cabbage-rose chintz so, when she lounges on her butter yellow chaise longue or sits at her satinwood desk, she's under a bower of flowers, so to speak, and loves it.

Another bedroom quite sensibly settles a common quandary of apartment dwellers when there is barely enough wall space to place a bed effectively. Just forget the windows as light sources, and use the space they occupy as a background for the bed. In this case, the "headboard" was created by a set of beautifully selected wood panels, hinged together like a screen, and set across the window area. The boxspring base is attached to the center panels. It seems quite a direct solution, especially for people who rarely use their bedrooms in the daytime or are stuck with the gloomy light from an airshaft which is hardly worth having anyhow.

Up against a similar wall-space problem in his brownstone bedroom, weaver-designer Jack Lenor Larsen decided that the tremendous old mantelpiece, which surrounded an unusable fireplace, might just as well function as a headboard. He filled in the fire opening with a wood panel to match the wood of the elaborately carved mantelpiece, and set his double-size boxspring and mattress against it. All to particularly regal effect, because he had a five-inch-high platform built to support the bed, raising it to normal height from the floor.—M.G.

How to break the birthday-party habit

Ice cream, cake, and candy are all right in their place, but enough is enough. Here's a mother who tried cocktail sausages, fish sticks, and pickles with great success

By BARBARA EWING YLVISAKER

■ Are children as tradition-bound about birthday parties as their parents? Definitely not, judging from my own experience.

For the sake of tradition, a mother feels she must serve cake and ice cream. For the sake of convenience she will often toss in soda pop, candy favors, lollipops, and maybe chocolate-bar prizes as well. The result of this solid sugar spree, if not a stomach ache, is a kind of grogginess or fatigue, and certainly a refusal to eat for the rest of the day. Who says the children really asked us for this punishment in the first place?

After years of giving this kind of party for my own children (I have four), I felt it had gone too far. I decided to try something different. The results of my experiment were too good to believe or keep to myself.

Last summer, for the fifth birthday of my August-born, I planned an early buffet supper in the yard instead of afternoon refreshments. I set up a table on our lawn with a lazy-Susan tray in the middle and several self-service trays and plates beside it. In the various sections of the lazy-Susan I placed squares of cheese with toothpick handles, cocktail-size hot dogs, hot fish sticks, assorted sweet and dill pickles. In a separate dish, sitting on a nest of ice cubes to keep them cool and crisp, were green pepper slices, celery stalks, and carrot sticks. Tomatoes were at the height of their season, so I had a bowlful of large and small ones. I served assorted breads—whole-wheat and raisin as well as white—cut in finger slices and buttered. I could have used buttered buns, which would have saved me a few steps in the kitchen. There was a birthday cake waiting, and I had ice-cream cups in the refrigerator.

I did not parcel out the food or make suggestions. The children served themselves, buffet style, and I was only a pair of hands to help them with their plates. I wanted to see what refreshments the children would choose if left to themselves. I kept a private tally of their choices. The fish sticks and midget franks were devoured in seconds. With varying degrees of interest and appetite, all of the children traipsed to the pickles, the carrots and celery, and, of course, to the buttered bread. Only half the children asked for either cake or ice cream but not for both; two children wanted none at all; and one girl asked me if we had butterscotch pudding. An individualist, a small boy named Bradley, asked for two tomatoes for his supper and nothing more. He chose the two largest tomatoes from the bowl and ate them solemnly—no salt, no bread; in short, no frills.

ALONG with the food, I experimented with the entertainment. Our children's birthdays come in summer and fall, good times to keep Pin-the-Tail-on-the-Donkey on the shelf. At this party I tied loop-stick pops and balloons to a small tree in the yard. The decorated tree welcomed the children as they came into the yard. At the end of the party we cut down the pops and the balloons for take-home favors.

My oldest child and I had hidden unshelled peanuts in every conceivable clump of grass, privet joint, stone hollow, and fence top in our yard and around the garage. The peanut hunt started the party.

THEN we had a scavenger hunt. Since our birthday parties are usually neighborhood affairs with children of mixed ages, I divided the guests into two teams, each headed by an older child. Each team was supplied with a large paper bag and a list of instructions. Each team had to collect certain items from our yard or from the neighborhood (without crossing any streets). The instructions were kept simple, but the plot thickened just enough to keep the children busy while I organized the next round at home. One neighbor, for example, was to be asked for a piece of string six inches long and for a black button. The piece of string was to be tied to the lowest branch of a forsythia bush and the black button exchanged with a second neighbor for a signed slip of paper.

I had many items hidden in sandboxes, beside trash barrels, in tree trunks, and under stones or door mats. Though I might have managed this minor-league treasure hunt within our own yard, the cooperation of helpful (and amused) neighbors expanded the possibilities of the game.

The children all seemed to like the hocus-pocus of collecting a lot of meaningless items. The first team back won a special prize. Then each child received the final clue as to where the grand prize was hidden. The prizes were actually very modest, for it is more fun for everyone when there is an abundance of small favors. The activity and the reward are more important to children than the prizes themselves.

Why not try these and other ways to break the birthday-party pattern at your house?

Easy way to grill shish-kabab is also a perfect way. Roto-Lectric automatically turns the food-laden spits at correct basting speed; all the while, exposure to the vertical charcoal bed evenly cooks all food surfaces and infuses charcoal's savor. Grille holds six individual spits, 19½". Doubles as a rotisserie for small fowl or roasts; merely shift charcoal box for needed spacing between it and spit; $39.95. Size, 18¼" x 11½" x 6½".

Clothes dryer ideal for apartment-dwellers or small homes folds to 6-inch depth for closet storage. Easily moved to and fro; merely plug it into a convenience outlet when moved to desired spot. Completely automatic operation; drying source is a built-in, fan-forced heater. The Wonder-Fold services 8-pound laundry load; contains twelve 26-inch racks. Open size 26" x 26" x 38". Current use is only 1200 watts. Drying time per load is about one hour. Equipped with a 4-hour timer. UL-approved. Costs $99.50.

New percolator by Tricolator is made of stainless steel, a feature new and unique in the urn-type coffeemaker for home use; metal is the same heavy-duty type Tricolator uses for their restaurant urns. Stainless steel, as you may know, is often regarded as one of the most desirable metals for coffee-brewing. Brewing range is 20 to 60 cups. Brewing, fully automatic, is made a rapid cycle by 1500-watt input; when ready brew is kept piping hot for serving. Mirror finish; self-closing faucet. $69.95.

Portable air-purifying hood for ranges, Nautilus No-Duct hangs on a wall bracket. Bracket attachment and cord connection to a convenience outlet installs the unit. Ideal where rented dwellings are concerned. Blower-type fan draws air from room through activated-charcoal filter and aluminum-mesh grease filter; then recirculates deodorized, purified air through hood's louver area. Built-in fluorescent light. A 48″ size, stainless steel, about $161; 30″, 36″, 42″ available. Prices start at $99.95 for 30″ size.

Electric drapery control has become a pertinent home convenience with today's prevalence of window walls and picture windows. When its switch is flipped, automatic Electro-traverse opens or closes curtains to pre-set stop; at any point of travel, they can be stopped, started, reversed in action. Any convenience outlet powers the unit. Model for up to 35-foot curtain expanse, about $140. Remote control and/or time clock can be added to this model or an available, non-automatic model. 1.55 ampere.

Traveler's viewpoint

Some notes and observations on psychology for travelers who don't like to be treated as tourists

By MARION GOUGH

● One of the surest ways to spot a real traveler is by his reaction to those unavoidable slings and arrows of outrageous fortune that sooner or later beset all voyagers—the hotel reservation that isn't honored, the power failure, the bus that goes off without you, the delayed plane departure. It's the greenhorn tourist who blows his top and is usually most noisy to the people who couldn't change the situation anyway, even if it were changeable.

We remember the exhibition a woman put on in the dining room of a second-rate hotel in India where she (just like us, as it happened) had to take refuge because the town's better hotel had no record of her reservation. This woman, loudly venting her pique on her husband, her travel agent, and, unreasonably, on the manager of this hotel, burst into (Please turn to page 112)

"Richard hates sight-seeing. Loves Daiquiris. Ah well!"

—writes Mary Meacham, who discovered the driest of all Daiquiris in Puerto Rico.

IMAGINE my husband, a staid scientist and a staunch defender of the rum highball, getting excited over a cocktail.

But I will say that dry, white Puerto Rican rum makes the difference in a Daiquiri. It's so dry, it tingles—even on the rocks. Señor Morales, our host, admitted that the unusual dryness of Puerto Rican rum puzzled even him.

"Some say it's the aging in oak," he explained. "Others claim it's because our rums are distilled at extra high proof. Frankly, I think it has to do with Puerto Rico's sunshine and mountain water."

My husband, in San Juan for the American Radium Society Convention just sipped his Daiquiri and beamed. Sometimes he can be quite unscientific. Thank heavens.

House Beautiful

JULY • 1960

Picture of an American building a dream with his hands. He is Carl Larson, of Bartlett, Illinois. His handmade house, the most rewarding achievement of his life, is shown at right and in detail on the next 12 pages. He built it himself from the foundation to the last nail in the roof, proving that the individualist who is not afraid of work is still the inspiring force in America's life.

House Beautiful salutes

The persistence of individual initiative

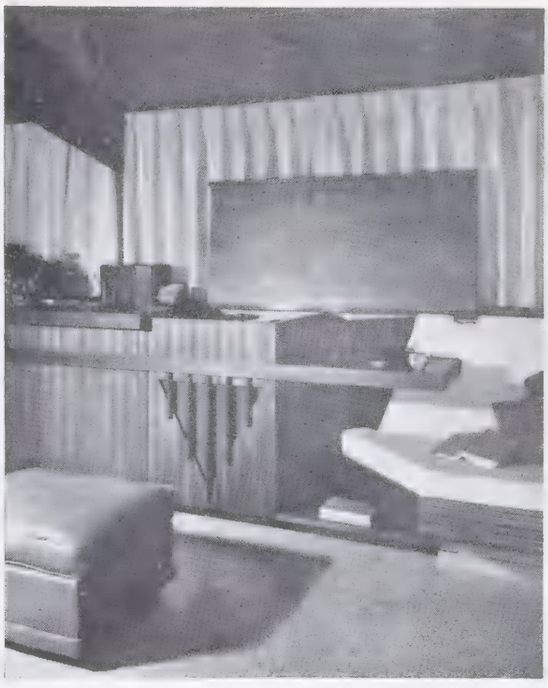
● In this issue we present three houses built by their owners' hands as evidence that individual choice implemented by hard work still remains the cornerstone of America's philosophy of life. All belong to men determined to give their families the best possible home. When they could neither find nor afford what they wanted ready-built, they built what they wanted with their own hands. It was a test of brawn and skill, but it was primarily a trial of self-discipline and steadfastness.

There will be Fourth-of-July oratory about our forefathers' courage and initiative in the ceaseless struggle to better themselves. And their stories may sometimes sound as if "they don't make men like that any more."

But they do. The houses you are about to see prove it.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY EMELIE DANIELSON NICHOLSON



Susan, Kurt, and Lora Larson, the motivators of this house their father built. Searching fruitlessly for a ready-built house which would give them the atmosphere of beauty in which he wanted them to grow, he decided to create it himself.

"To build your own house with your own labor," says Mr. Larson, "means that you can get a top-quality house the way you want it, not necessarily cheaply, but for a whole lot less than you'd pay for a mediocre ready-built house." Excluding the value of Mr. Larson's labor, this house cost about $33,000. Ceiling is redwood board, cypress-stained.

Architect Erickson's plan for this three-level house looks complicated (see it in details on page 59), but its triangular form, covered over all with one sloping roof, offers some direct solutions. Far left, a strip of windows running through house from inside out lets third-level bedrooms borrow light from living room. Above, see how overhangs are a continuation of ceiling. Built-in hi-fi cabinet and seating, above and right, integrate the room as well as furnish it.

The owner-built house shown here belongs to Carl M. Larson, a 31-year-old employee of the Illinois Bell Telephone Company, whose most notable assets in 1954 were a wife, a growing family, $10,000 in savings, and a conviction that one day his family would live in the kind of atmosphere he felt in the houses designed by Frank Lloyd Wright. In the spring of that year he bought a sloping, four-acre site in a wooded area in Bartlett, Illinois. It was not until last fall that he had finally achieved his goal. The story of what went on in the intervening five years will give you some idea of the moral, mental, and physical stamina it cost to attain this 2,000 square feet of warm, friendly shelter. But as you read it, bear in mind Mr. Larson's priceless reward—a high-quality house that gives his family not only physical comforts he could not have afforded to buy ready-made, but lavishes on them such daily acquaintance with natural and man-made beauty as few millionaires can enjoy.

It takes faith in oneself and more than ordinary manual skill to embark on a project like this. But an intelligent man knows his limitations. Mr. Larson is a qualified electrician and has handy-man proclivities, which he claims were no more than average when he started the job. But, although he and his wife knew in fairly clear detail what they wanted, he had no illusions about being an architect. So, right (Please turn the page)

"You pay more attention to your workmanship when you're building for yourself," says Mr. Larson. In the master bedroom, note the trimness with which he has fitted the strip-lighting trough around the exposed beam. The glazing of the corner window here is stationary, rabbetted into the framework of the house. Other windows open, overlooking a planted area below. On the opposite side of the room, a door opens onto a generous-size balcony.

Bathroom tiling took Mr. Larson one month to finish. He and his wife took shifts at the job. He would set the tiles in mastic in the morning before he went off to his regular work. Then she would take over, straightening out the tiles while the mastic was still moist. The terrazzo flooring in the house was one of the few things Mr. Larson did not do himself. A qualified electrician, he installed the wiring.

at the start, he explained his ideas and financial limitations to an architect, Don Erickson, whose houses he had seen, and who he knew would understand the kind of house he was driving at. By fall Mr. Erickson had designed a three-level house of concrete brick, redwood siding, and cedar shake roof. It would have terrazzo flooring, broad wall areas in glass, and interiors finished with redwood and mahogany. While the design demanded materials of high quality, the triple-level plan was a measure of economy. The exterior walls of a house are the most expensive structural parts, and by splitting the floor space of a house into several levels, you can enclose more livable area within your expensive walls. Mr. Erickson acted as advisor and consultant throughout the project. Mr. Larson gives him whole-hearted credit for the design skill and knowledgeability that set the house on the right track and he thinks, as we do, that no one could attempt such a venture without engaging the services of a good designer.

During the winter of 1954-55, Mr. Larson spent every spare moment doing his "materials take-off," that is, estimating the quantity and cost of the materials needed to build the house. This is a tedious evaluation of the plan, wall by wall, floor by floor, down to the last piece of hardware, including heating, plumbing, and wiring systems. It's a job customarily done by an estimator or contractor but Mr. Larson did it himself to save the estimator's fee. When the estimate was finished, it was only too clear that the house was beyond the Larson budget. Here Mr. Larson stood by (Please turn the page)

All the bedrooms are on the third level. The two Larson girls share this one, equipped with a built-in play and study counter and a paneled niche of shelves for their toys. Floor-covering here is a practical, spatterdash vinyl tile. Windows overlook living terrace, have split-wood blinds.

A perfectly equipped kitchen was one of the goals the Larsons worked and saved for—and couldn't find in a ready-built house. Theirs has such convenient, labor-saving equipment as a counter-top range, a combination refrigerator-freezer and double-level wall ovens. A built-in bench gives them seating for casual meals.

The family room, below, on the ground level with the kitchen, is also the laundry, sewing room, and Mr. Larson's work room. A sleep sofa makes it usable for guests. Bathroom is near-by. Laundry tubs and washer-dryer fit into one wall; Mr. Larson's workbench and tools in another. Both are screened by folding doors.

Of the whole house, Mr. Larson is probably proudest of the kitchen, paneled in mahogany plywood and lined with touch-lock cabinets, which he designed and built himself. The stainless-steel sink at sit-down level and the electric dishwasher were installed almost at once, before anything else was finished, mainly as a time-saver so Mrs. Larson could devote more time to the chores required by the building job. Above the sink there's an open pass-through to the floor of the second level, where their more formal dining is done. The long counter at right includes a pull-out chopping block, a food center for automatic equipment like mixers and squeezers, and a hooded ventilating blower above the counter-top range. All counter tops and splashboards are covered in laminated plastic. The floor is terrazzo.

his conviction that if you want something badly enough it is worth working and waiting for. He separated himself from his family and job and went to the Canadian Arctic to work for one year on the DEW Line project where salaries were high, and he could systematically save enough money to bring his dream nearer to realization. Meantime, Mrs. Larson and the children lived in the home of her parents.

By spring of 1956 he had enough money to start negotiating with the bank for a mortgage. But not without another go-round with the material estimates. He made no compromises with quality, but shopped around assiduously for the best prices in lumber, concrete brick, piping, wire, glass, hardware. Acting as his own contractor, he had to get bids on such jobs as he was not equipped to do himself—the excavation and grading, the digging of the well, the terrazzo flooring, the plaster and lath work, the hard-surface driveway, the digging to expand a one-acre lake on the property to get better drainage. This work he hired by the hour at (Please turn the page)

The Larsons, three children and Peppy, the dog, lived for the better part of a year and ten months in the camping-out atmosphere of an unfinished house, with its concrete brick and bare plaster showing.

When they first moved into the unfinished house, the sink was the one bright spot in the dreariness.

This is the landing at the second level of the house. The seven stairs at the right lead up to the bedrooms above; turning the corner you go down only seven steps to the kitchen below. The living room with its wide terrace opens off this landing at the left of picture.

Plans of the three-level Larson house show how much living is enclosed within the simple walls and the sloping roof non-union scale, which meant a job of finding qualified workmen who were willing to accept these terms.

For the rest, he did it himself, with occasional help from friends whom he is now repaying in kind. (He says he knows six persons engaged in building their own houses.) "The rest" literally means everything else—such monumental labors as mixing and pouring the concrete for the footings, laying the block foundation, and doing all the brick work, using mortar he mixed in a wheelbarrow. He put up the steel deck, all the framing including mullions, beams, etc., built his own window frames and chimney, nailed on the cedar shingles, installed the septic system, the plumbing, a low-voltage wiring system with underground service, and two-zone hot-water radiant heat. He did all the glazing and sheet-metal work, tiled the upstairs bath and [illegible] downstairs lavatory, put up the interior wood paneling, made and installed kitchen cabinets, window seats and hi-fi cabinets, supplying his own millwork drawings and blueprints to the lumber yard. He did all his own wood finishing, including the sanding, staining, painting. And if this sounds like a Herculean task, it is even more impressive when you consider that this man was simultaneously holding down a full-time job, driving fifty miles a day to and from work.

By December of 1957 the shell of the house was built, and the Larsons and their three young children moved in. This is where the fortitude of the lady of the house was put to the acid test. "There was not a room you could call livable," says Mr. Larson. "The whole job of finishing the house was ahead of us. We had outside doors and windows and the terrazzo floor, but the rest was exposed concrete block and raw plaster. We had one toilet and a lavatory hooked up, but no shower. The bathrooms weren't tiled. Our shelves and cupboards were slats of plywood and cardboard boxes. We had no walks or terraces laid—just piles of dirt and a mud driveway, and when it rained it was awful. We had an old electric range in the kitchen. The first things I installed were the stainless steel sink, the electric washer and dryer, and the dishwasher—to reduce Mrs. Larson's (Please turn the page)

A cross-section of the three-level house indicates how one slab of sloping roof economically tops the house, explains the combination of soaring glass vistas and low-ceilinged intimacy you feel in the living room.

SECOND LEVEL

A great living area, open on three sides to the outdoors through walls and doors of glass, occupies the second level, provides the family with eating, sitting, entertaining space, and a terrace. At top of plan, see the outside stairs down to the first level.

Third level is devoted to bedrooms. Here the sloping roof reaches its highest point from the ground, having started its ascent as the overhang to the living room, which you saw on page 53. Concept of this tilted-lid roof is basically simple, as well as economical.

FIRST LEVEL

Architect Erickson's plan provided a house on three levels as a measure of economy. Exterior enclosing walls of a house are its most costly, so a variety of levels lets the walls enclose more room space for the cost. Entry, kitchen, family room, lavatory are on the first level, seven steps down from second level.

The house is full of refinements, like the sliding doors to the storage closet in the third-level hall. Looking from the master bedroom to the girls' bedroom, you see the honest pattern of ceiling and beams, which is like a decorative motif, besides being an easily maintained practicality. Glazed door at immediate left opens onto the balcony extending out from the third level.

How can two little Larson girls sleep in the single bed shown on page 55? Here is the answer. It is a trundle bed, meaning that it is two beds, one sliding under the other. In this case, both beds can stand at equal level, because when the lower bed is pulled out, its legs rise up and lock in place at the same height as the other bed. Bedmaking is simplified since lower bed can be made up even when it slides away for storing.

This is a house for comfort. Because it was in a hard-water area, Mr. Larson knew there would be no real bathing and washing comfort without a water softener (above). It is installed in the hall of the family room. Beyond it is another comfort—a refrigerator-freezer combination to supplement the one in the kitchen, letting the Larsons buy in quantity and save frequent, time-consuming shopping. Left is the laundry wall of the family room (page 56) where washer, dryer, and laundry trays can be shut off by folding doors. The vinyl tile flooring is not harmed by laundry splashes.

work so she could spend the time on sanding woodwork or whatever else had to be done. It was the mess that bothered her most of all. There was always something to clean up or to keep the kids out of. We seemed to live in a sea of mud and sawdust. We lived in this kind of upheaval for a year and ten months, and we'd have to confess there were moments when the job looked so endless and home life was so dreary, we were almost sorry we'd ever begun. But things improved every day as each job was finished and, by and large, it was fun.

"Naturally, we had no time for a social life, but in the spring I built a 12-foot table for outdoors, and our family and friends used to come and picnic under the trees. On week ends we'd be swamped with visitors. Total strangers who'd be passing by got so fascinated by the house that they'd pull up and ask to see it. We were real glad to let people know all about it. We were surprised how many people had never heard of Frank Lloyd Wright and what he stood for, so we felt as if we were part of the crusade for mankind to rate a better house."

Time, he admits, is the build-it-yourselfer's bugaboo. "You're slow," he says, "that's what you're fighting all the time, so you have to make every living minute count, especially the daylight minutes. A professional carpenter can install eight or ten doors a day, but when I first started, it would take me ten hours to put in two doors. But one of the great satisfactions of the job is to see how much more easily you can handle materials after you've got used to working with them. The thought of handling those big sheets of plate glass scared me and, after the first time I installed a piece, my legs were wobbly for half an hour. But after a while I was slinging that stuff around without thinking about it. You also discover skills you didn't know you had. I found out I have a real knack for bricklaying, but I didn't know it. A friend had to show me how to start. By now I also feel I'm a pretty good carpenter and cabinetmaker.

The quality of the workmanship—the finesse of the joinings, the neatness of the turnings, the look of a "thorough job"—is evident throughout the Larson house (as it is also in the owner-built Borgatta and Mills houses shown on pages 64 to 71), and amounts to a wry commentary on the run-of-the-mill, hastily-turned-out look frequently seen in professionally-built houses. It's one reason why people like Larson, Borgatta, and Mills decided to do for themselves. As Mr. Larson says, "It stands to reason that you put more care and effort into a house you're building for yourself."

Mr. Larson had one brush with union labor when a representative of the bricklayers' (Please turn the page)

"I owe a lot to good, efficient tools," says the owner-builder of this house, who treats the implements that helped him make it like jewels

union showed up and indicated his displeasure at finding no union men on the job. Mr. Larson's incontrovertible reply was that there was no law prohibiting a free man in the United States from building his own home, so long as his work passed the local building inspectors.

If he had it to do over again, Mr. Larson says he would let a pro do all the flat concrete work, like slab floors and terraces. Mixing, floating, and smoothing concrete is back-and-knee-breaking work in itself, one of those things where you must work against time as the material sets up. This can depend upon the mixing, the weather, and a number of other factors so it takes experience to be able to gauge reactions properly. His plumbing work and installation of the soil pipe was done with the advice and assistance of a master plumber working along with him on the job. Oddly enough he is not completely satisfied with his job of covering kitchen counters with plastic laminate. He feels that, to be perfect, this requires special tools and a deftness that comes with practice.

Good working tools were his best friends. He says he could never have done what he did without his power saw, which is now handily enshrined, along with the rest of his basic handyman equipment, in the workshop he designed for himself. This extends along one wall of the lower-level room which also serves as laundry, sewing room, family room, and guest room, its working areas easily screenable by pull-out folding doors when not in use.

He feels that, given a handyman's skill, with persistence and devotion, anyone can build his own house. But he must want that house so badly that he is willing to give up everything else until he gets it. "For nearly four years all I did was work, sleep, eat, and build my house. It was rough, but then nothing can compare with the swell of pride you feel when you look at the place and think, 'I did it myself.'"

See page 121 for detailed information on this house

Good tools are essential to beauty and accuracy of workmanship, and Mr. Larson gives his full credit. He says he could not have done the job without his power saw. By cleverly organizing space he has now set up his workshop as part of the family room in bright, cheerful, easily cleaned-up surroundings, the same room his wife uses for sewing. Right, folding doors conceal workshop disorder.

A new assertion of independence

This handmade house is one man's approach to getting the beauty he hoped to find —but couldn't—in a ready-built house

Architect Torkelsen and the Borgattas worked out this two-level plan for the sloping site, facing the living areas of the house toward a view of the Hudson River. The open plan of the first level gives them, in effect, one enormous room, 38 feet long with a 14-foot-high gabled ceiling, encased on three sides by glass so that it is light all day long. The kitchen, dining, living, and studio-workshop functions are suggested rather than actually separated, so the building of partitions was unnecessary. Ceiling is supported by posts of hand-selected Douglas fir. The lower level is partitioned into sleeping and utility rooms. Mr. Borgatta's general system for saving labor costs was to engage a master workman, then sign on the job as a laborer. Working alone, he cleared the land. Landscaping was designed by Karl Linn.

● This frame and stucco house in Dobbs Ferry, N.Y., was built by the personal labor of its owner, Robert E. Borgatta. It stems from one couple's unwillingness to follow the herd, and put up with the limitations of ready-built housing they could afford to buy. They were New York City apartment dwellers, looking for a more suburban atmosphere in which to raise their three small daughters. As a man with some skill at carpentry, Mr. Borgatta was appalled at the prices asked for the quality of materials and workmanship offered. As artists—he is a painter and professor of art at CCNY; she is Isabel Case Borgatta, a sculptress and teacher of sculpture in the same college—they were discouraged by the caliber of design they found.

Their goal was never cheapness per se, but value and beauty. Since labor is a major item in the cost of a house, Mr. Borgatta's reasoning was (Please turn the page)

The Borgatta house faces the road with a tiled, almost windowless front. Its other sides are virtually all glass, giving its occupants light and view with privacy. Because it presented an unusual aspect in a neighborhood of more traditional architecture, its completion was delayed by objections from the local board of architectural review.

Road-facing façade is paneled in ceramic tile, except for the glazed entry. Panel width is a module of dimension and sets the pattern rhythm of the house. Living-room-studio and kitchen are on this level. Bedrooms are below, where house fits into the slope.

that by working on the building himself he could save enough in labor costs to afford the best quality in planning and materials. Events proved him right. He could have bought adequate shelter for the $30,000 his house and land cost, but the same money could never have bought 1,724 square feet of architect-designed, custom-built beauty, where every piece of lumber was hand-selected, sanded before being put into place, then varnished, sanded again, and constantly refinished like a piece of furniture. The plan, designed by Architect Stanley M. Torkelsen, called for the meticulous procedures of the costliest building. (Please turn to page 112)

Few houses give as much sense of cheerful light and free space to move in as one feels in this owner-built living room. Mr. Borgatta is especially proud of his part in installing the uprights and the bolted ridge beams that support the tent-like gable roof. Built-in shelves and cabinets are birch, structural members are Douglas fir, window frames and trim are redwood, all hand-finished like furniture. The sculpture is by Mrs. Borgatta. Paintings are by Mr. Borgatta. He paid for some of the building costs with his art work.

On a steeply sloping site the living room and adjoining deck on the second-floor level provide sheltered privacy overlooking treetops to take fullest advantage of distant mountain panorama. Cedar siding, the same inside and out, is applied horizontally so long level lines make house seem broader and lower. Dentils on fascia are individual wood blocks.

How to get an $18,000 house for $8,500

● Not every designer is actually experienced in the building trades. Neither are construction workmen usually gifted with creative imagination. But, when these two talents are combined—when a designer designs with his own labor in mind—the results can be amazing, as you can see in this house. Because it was planned for economy of labor as well as materials, the owner and his wife were able to build it in less than a year, working only part time.

On a regular contract basis it would have cost $18,000. Yet, by doing the construction work themselves, they actually spent only $8,500. Although the design of the house was based on this very low budget, the result embodies all the satisfactions of good architecture (Please turn the page)

Bold structural pattern and the warmth of natural materials give this room a quiet mellow beauty appropriate to its wooded setting and harmonious with its sweeping view of the countryside. at any scale and any price. The beauty of the site is used to the fullest advantage. The materials used, although unpretentious and many of them second-hand, have fine quality and natural beauty. Skillful handling of the structure and floor plan produces an interior with a sense of spaciousness and varied interest, even though the actual enclosed area is only 755 square feet.

Only the occasional help of an unskilled laborer was needed to assist in placing the big timbers. Otherwise, construction was kept simple so large crews and expensive machinery were not needed. Even the placing of the house on the steep slope was worked out so a minimum of bulldozing was required, at the same time retaining the beauty of the site. Further economy was achieved by relying on the natural texture of wood grains and mountain stones to give warmth and richness without the need of expensive decorative finishes. In the same way, landscaping costs were saved by preserving the natural growth on the hillside.

Excavation was done only for carport and turnaround space. Main floor, raised off the ground, is supported on timbers at six corners of hexagon. Partitions, except bath, are kept short of ceiling so small rooms seem more spacious and open.

The High Hopes and the Hazards of building with your own hands

If you are contemplating building with your own hands, here is what those who've done it think you should know before you start. Though they rate the achievement as one of the towering experiences of life, they all admit there were moments when they'd willingly have thrown in the sponge. But all agree that nothing surpasses the satisfaction of this kind of home ownership

By MARION GOUGH

● To build your own house with your own hands is no project to embark upon lightly. But you could be dazzled into a premature decision by the successfully hand-built houses of others, because you see them in their serene finished state, without having any real idea of what it took to achieve these results. And the prospect of having exactly what you want and saving money, too, can be fraught with an aura of freedom and high adventure which may obscure some of the less glamorous realities.

Unanimously, those who have already had the experience tell us that the rewards are immeasurably satisfying, comparable to few other attainments in life. But, quite as unanimously, they agree that few projects are more relentlessly demanding of physical strength, time, ingenuity, and patience. And the one most sobering aspect of the job is that once you've started, there's no backing out. Their advice, if you are contemplating doing your own building, is to look carefully before you leap.

The major prerequisite is that you have better than average mechanical aptitude. If you have always been a handyman, a putterer, a fixer, a man with a talent for figuring out solutions to mechanical problems, you are a likely candidate. But since all human beings tend not to see their own talents in clear perspective, you must lean over backwards not to overestimate your abilities. Ideally, you should have had practical experience with all the major phases of building. If you can manage it, it would be wise to get an objective opinion of your capabilities from someone qualified to judge—a friend whose own ability is high or, better yet, a working mechanic, a "pro." Let them see a job you've done and get their opinion on the quality of your work. This awareness of your own capabilities is important, since it will be a guide to the planning of your operation. You may have greater proficiency in some skills than others. If you know this, you can decide to do certain jobs yourself and leave others to professionals.

Almost as important as an appraisal of your talents for building is an absolutely realistic appraisal of your personal talent for steadfast dedication to a job in the face of just plain exhaustion. This is particularly crucial if you are building in your spare time, as most people have to. You will always be working with too little time. The bank's payments of mortgage money are usually made in installments as certain parts of the job are finished, so you will also have financial deadlines in a very real sense. Interest payments must be met even as the house is being built, and meantime you have the expenses of your current housing, so there's urgent necessity to get the new house livable as soon as possible. The pressure of time takes another direction, too—since you're a greenhorn at this business, your own slowness is a trial to be borne.

You must be sure before you start that you are going to have the moral and physical stamina to keep everlastingly at it, without permitting yourself to be diverted. There will be no vacation week ends or holidays or free evenings for you, and social life and hobbies go out the window. But the period that will make the greatest demands on your fortitude is the half-way mark when the house has become just shelter enough so you have no excuse for not moving into it. In this half-finished situation you may have to live for months surrounded by the cheerless inconvenience of raw plaster, makeshift lighting, incomplete kitchen or bath, with a minimum of furnishings and a maximum of mess, with every job screaming to be finished.

Women in particular find this a nightmare, and this is generally conceded to be the point in the whole project that separates the men from the boys. Many people have given up from sheer exhaustion—either settling down in inertia to live forever-after in an unfinished house, or turning their backs on the whole venture, selling it fast for whatever they could realize on it.

You should know quite clearly what you expect to accomplish by doing your own work. Your goal should be to get a house costing less than the same house would cost built by conventional ways. Labor being the single most costly ingredient in any building project, you can achieve more house by your own personal labor expenditure.

It is wise to hire a lawyer even before you buy your land and use him throughout as your advisor and representative in connection with every agreement you may make. You will have as much to learn about the legalities of land ownership and negotiating contracts as about the actual processes of building and sound legal advice can forestall blunders that may be costly or disadvantageous to your interests.

It is highly recommended that you hire an architect. An architect is your best assurance that the finished house will be good enough to warrant all that blood, sweat, and tears. Get him into the job early, if possible before you buy land. His advice can save you many a false step, and will undoubtedly produce a house of better, more polished design than you are likely to plan for yourself. Usually it is in the quality of design that owner-planned houses fall down. Why waste all that hard work on a "cornball?"

As the personal builder of your own house, you will be operating as a general contractor. This means you will be purchasing your own materials. For those parts of the job which you may turn over to specialists, as for instance, plumbing, heating, and electrical wiring, you must get in bids and negotiate agreements with the favored bidders.

To find out whether or not your plan is financially feasible, you must determine the quantity of materials needed and what they are going to cost. For this you must evaluate the architect's floor plans and elevations, item by item. This is the "materials take-off," a job usually turned over by the contractor to a practiced estimator. Consider hiring an estimator yourself.

When you know what is needed, building supply dealers and lumber yards will give you cost estimates. You may save money by shopping around, but however you do it, be prepared to give this phase of it your time.

Which jobs you do yourself and which you let out depend upon your own particular skills and know-how, so no one rule applies to all cases. You will obviously not want to undertake work at which you do not feel skilled. But it may be cheaper for you, in point of time saved or energy conserved, to let out some jobs that you are capable of doing yourself. Given enough time and muscle, anyone can dig an excavation. But hired labor with a tractor can do it more quickly and efficiently, so the time saved may be worth the cost. Generally, logical jobs to let out—because they are heavy or because for economy they require special equipment—are excavating and grade work, major concrete work, plumbing, septic systems, electrical wiring, and heating.

You must acquaint yourself with your local building code to be sure you are not planning to use materials or methods prohibited by the code. You must submit your plans for approval to the local government's building department before they will issue a building permit. Building inspectors will come from time to time to check on the job.

You must also check local zoning regulations to be sure that you meet their requirements. Regulations vary with locality for the distance a house must be set back from the street and the side and rear boundaries of the lot. There are apt to be many other restrictions, often archaic.

Study your deed for any extraordinary agreements made by former owners of your land which might affect the way your house may be built or located. Sometimes neighborhood organizations or land development groups have a right to pass judgment on your plans as a measure of protecting the aesthetic character of the neighborhood. Investigate their requirements in advance, for if they contest your architectural taste, you can be in for some time-consuming red tape and, perhaps, some costly revisions.

As a general thing, building trades' unions take a dim view of do-it-yourselfers. They have been known to send representatives to owner-builder jobs to express their displeasure, and even to attempt to hold up the job by making it difficult for you to get services of other union labor you might have been planning to use. Union men have been known to walk off the job when the owner himself attempted to work. These are difficult situations that call for delicate handling. You may never have to face them, but you must be ready for them.

By and large, the owner-builders we met have taken all this as part of the game, fighting obstructions just as they fought time and discomfort, feeling that it is a small price to pay for getting what you want.

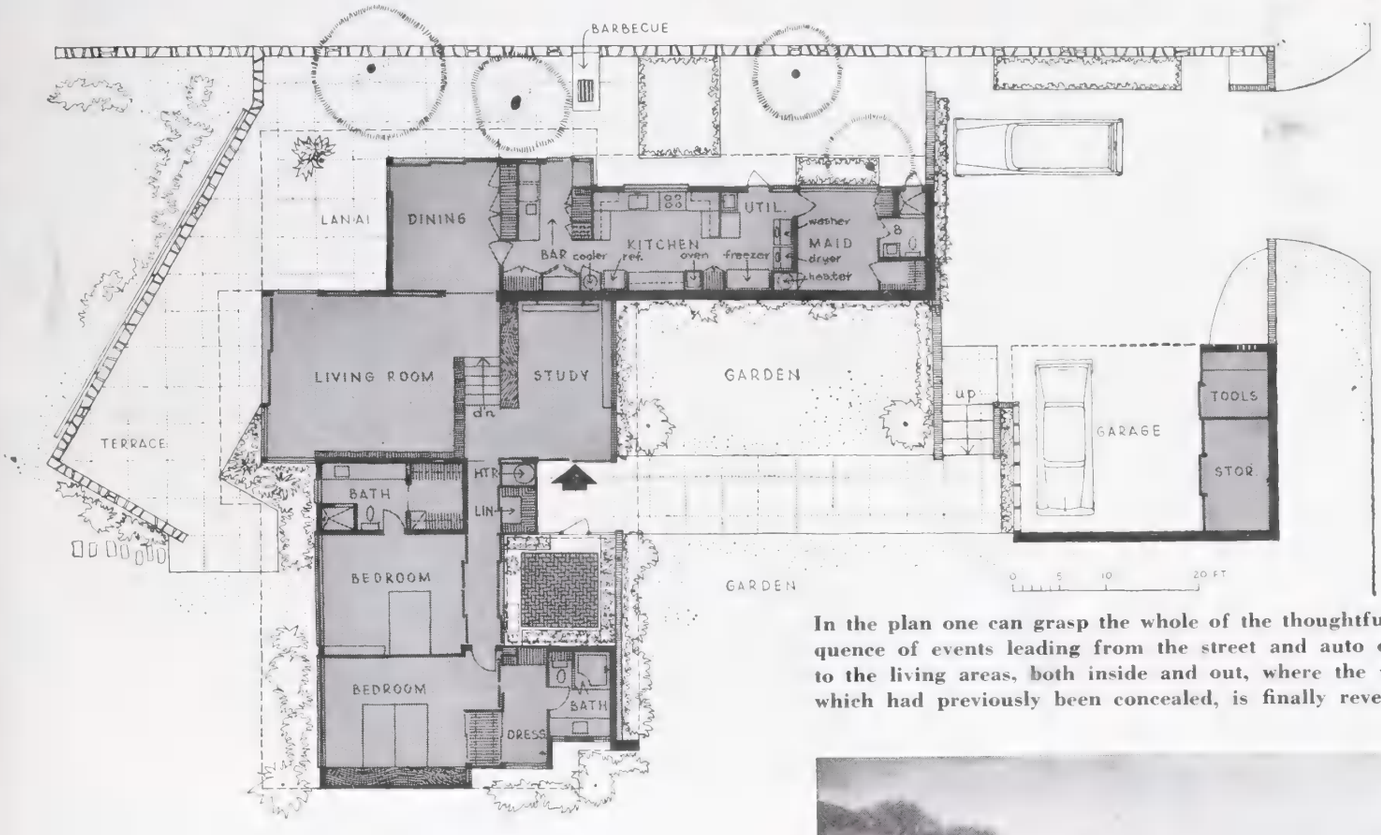
● Anything gains or loses in interest from the manner in which it is presented. Whether it be a gift, a simple tale, a view, or a person, the degree of its charms and the interest that it holds for us will be partially determined and considerably increased by the way in which it is, or is not revealed to us.

"The secret of being a bore," according to Voltaire, "is to tell everything." This applies to architecture as well as people. But since a building is a tangible object which, in a sense, eventually "tells everything," the statement might be rephrased when applied to architecture to read, "to tell everything all at once," to leave nothing further to be discovered or to be disclosed.



This house illustrates this seemingly simple principle of holding something in reserve, of not telling everything. A person arriving for the first time in the rather non-committal auto court receives little (Please turn the page)

Entering the living area after passing through the transitional entrance garden, detaching the house from the street and its activity, is a pleasant surprise. One suddenly realizes that more is here than his introduction had intimated. What he had expected to be closed-in is, by contrast, outgoing and open. indication that behind the walls separating this public area from the private is a spectacular view of the ocean. He knows only that the steps leading up to the entrance garden, glimpsed through the carport's trellis wall, suggest that something interesting is ahead. A person familiar with the house recaptures this experience.

The entrance garden, which is a quiet transition between the street and the living quarters, invites one on but does not betray the secret of what is yet in store.

But when a person enters the study, part of the main living area but on a higher level, space suddenly opens out before him and his pleasure is increased because of the discovery. It is the quiet thrill known by (Please turn the page)

In the living room, brick walls are used to effect a smooth transition between the entrance garden (which is really a kind of entrance hall) and the enclosed areas. Otherwise, except for accents of strong color, the materials used are neutral in color and serve as a background to set off the view and the room's activity.

The lanai, although an outdoor room, is luxuriously furnished as a lounging area and, to achieve continuity, in a manner similar to that of the living room and appropriate in association with nature.

The master bedroom continues the accented but essentially neutral color scheme of the other living areas. The simple lines of the few furnishings do not call attention to themselves but emphasize the understated quality of the whole house.

everyone who has suddenly come upon some delightful scene which he had not been anticipating or prepared to expect. There is the contrast between the somewhat solid and closed-in quality suggested by the entrance court and the approach garden and the bright and outgoing openness of the living room. There is a change in floor levels contrasting the low-ceilinged space of the study with the higher space of the living room. And there is the sudden impact of the dramatic view toward the ocean which had been knowingly concealed so that, when finally presented, its effect would count for much more.

This thoughtful regard for presentation has helped to determine the character of the house. It is present not only in the planned sequence of events leading up to the disclosure of the view. It is also in the background character of the house. It does not try to compete with the view but subtly and indirectly turns attention to it. This is not a house that says, "Look at me." Its restrained and undemanding quality serves to set off and to becomingly present the occupants and the activities of their daily life as well as the view.

The dining room, as a quiet background for dining, illustrates this. As seen in the photo (left), the subdued quality of this background serves to point up the richness of the table setting. But the table setting itself is also a kind of understatement. It does not immediately catch the eye as something more colorful would. It willingly plays a supporting role and lets the social event itself become the center of interest.

The bedroom wing, in its planning, does not call attention to itself or try to tell everything all at once. The passage leading to the master bedroom has pleasant interludes along the way: the study-bedroom and the private little court opposite it. As revealed and discovered along the way, they make walking down the passage a refreshing experience, something a little more than just getting there.

Perhaps, after the problems of shelter have been solved, this is domestic architecture's main role: to make life something a little more than just getting there, to present it as a pleasantly-told tale, the teller remaining, in effect, subservient to the story being presented.

The dining room, furnished in a subdued and unobtrusive manner, is a becoming background for the table and its appointments, the meal being served, and the guests present at the occasion. The light-diffusing, sheer linen draperies (used in other rooms also) do not shut out the landscape but soften its details and blend them into an undemanding background.

One of the dining-room walls, faced with grass-cloth panels, conceals the door to the kitchen and service area (above) as well as the practical presence of generous and convenient storage cabinets for the linen, china, silver, etc. used in this room. As normally seen (right), the paneled wall becomes a quiet element contributing to the background quality of the total setting.

By CURTIS BESINGER

Unique in the United States, this fantastic building (left), whose cornerstone was laid in 1905, is the Vedanta Temple and Monastery in San Francisco. It was the first Hindu temple in this country. It was also a peak, of a kind, in buildings representative of the Victorian era. The multiplicity of turrets, towers, bay windows, galleries, battlements, etc. could have been produced only in an era bold with vitality and reveling in its own heterogeneity. It has not been changed.

Capturing the festive romance of life on the Mississippi River boats and expressing his own love for the magic of the river and its life, Captain Milton Doullut, aided by his son and a laborer, completed this house in New Orleans in 1901. Strung upon rope, the swags of wooden balls swinging in the wind suggest movement in the building. Answering the psychological needs of the owner, this seemingly fanciful and impractical device was functional in its origin.

your pleasure

● Are you staying near home this summer? If so, you needn't miss out on some of the available pleasures of traveling.

People travel for many reasons, but a great many travelers devote a large portion of their time to searching out the man-made wonders of this world, particularly the buildings of past cultures.

In the town or city where you live, on its main streets or not far removed from them, are many delightful old buildings which, if not so venerable and as deeply encrusted with the patina of history as buildings in Europe and Asia, can be no less satisfying and fascinating as discoveries. These are the buildings that we have inherited from the Victorian era.

During the latter part of the 19th Century many fantastic and wonderful buildings were constructed in almost every part of the United States. They are called by various names such as General Grant Gothic, American Gothic, the "Gingerbread Style," Hudson (Please turn the page)

In Galveston, the mansion of Walter Gresham, a Texas congressman and industrialist, was completed in 1891 at a cost of $250,000. Designed by Architect N. J. Clayton, it is evidence of the search for fresh forms, expressive of the independent and vigorous spirit of the era. Preceding forms could have been copied, as photo below indicates.

Following closely in the style of its Italian Renaissance antecedents, this building, the first private art gallery in California, was built in the 1880's in Sacramento behind the mansion of Judge E. B. Crocker, famous politician and financier. Its magnificent and carefully preserved Victorian interiors, among the best in the country, are rich with inlay, carved woodwork, painted ceilings, River Bracketed, American Mansard, etc.

Many of us overlook these buildings because they are an accustomed and familiar part of our environment. We pass them by without really seeing them and, by doing so, miss pleasures that can be ours. These buildings are in the unfortunate position of being only old enough to be scorned as old-fashioned and not old enough to be treasured as antiques.

In them, for all to read, is a conveniently accessible and still unblurred record of a fabulous and dynamic period of American expansion and development, a time of rapid sociological and technological change. It was a period of transformation during which the United States changed from an agricultural outpost of Western civilization into an industrialized world power.

The structures that a civilization leaves behind it are probably the truest record of its qualities as a civilization. They may not represent all of its hopes and dreams, but they do represent in very tangible form the values and the degree of commitment to them, the goals that were felt worth realization, and the kinds and quantities of spirit, energy, and will devoted to their realization.

Contrast the somber and mysterious quality of this fantastic house with the smiling serenity of the house in the photo below. Called Ardoyne Plantation, this prime example of Carpenter Gothic was built in 1895 in the densely vegetated region around Bayou Black in Louisiana. Much inventiveness was displayed in the translation of Gothic stone tracery into wooden fretwork produced with the aid of power-driven turning lathes and scroll saws. Elaborate examples of this lacy "gingerbread," a typical expression of the Victorian era, can be found everywhere. The house in the photo below is another application of this highly-developed folk art.

The Victorian era has been vehemently denounced with all of the vocabulary of depreciation by the period that immediately followed it. That it was a period of atrocious and horrible taste and undistinguished building are among the milder and often repeated charges.

These handed-down dicta have become a part of our way of thinking and accepted as sacred dogma. We have never bothered to question them. As a result, we have not seen these buildings with our own eyes. We have seen them only through the eyes of our predecessors and with the bias of their prejudices. Until recently, to say that anything was Victorian was to condemn it automatically.

It is true that bad buildings were constructed in this era. Probably no era is without that (Please turn the page)

Graceful and elegant, this house in Galveston, Texas, has its counterpart in almost every town and city. Although the elements of the design are arranged with a classic formality, the elements themselves evoke a highly romantic atmosphere that seems both Gothic and Moorish. Note the cantilevered and open corners, a structural device that anticipates features we consider "modern."

The San Francisco area is rich in handsome old Victorians. Many expert woodcarvers migrated to this area in the 1850's. The way they improvised on rough plans prepared by the owners often gave these houses a quality of individuality.

portion of bad work which must be worked off and got rid of before it does better. An age of experiment will produce failures as well as successes. It is not generally recognized that there were successful and good buildings in this era. Some of them, proud and stately, have real qualities of style and distinction.

It is only as more and more of these buildings have been torn down to make way for "progress" that we have come to realize, too late, that something has been taken away, that something is missing. The buildings that have taken their places are lacking in certain desirable qualities that the older ones possessed. Some of our sleek modern façades have all of the "virtues" of the cellophane-packed tomato, but they lack the "faults" that produce real flavor. The Victorians may not have conformed to some standards of "good taste," but they did appreciate rich flavor. However offensive their buildings might have been to some people, they did have character. Whatever else the vices of Victorian buildings were, they were never petty.

They were not built in a finger-to-the-wind spirit of conformity and with the hope of pleasing by not displeasing. When these buildings were wrong, they were assuredly and gloriously wrong in a sometimes splendid, sometimes humorous way. These are not tepid and timid buildings. They have an element of dash and swagger in them. Many of them are undisciplined and lacking in unity. But they do have qualities that no amount of good taste can supplant and without which no true style is possible: vigor and vitality.

These buildings represent a kind of restless stirring. Many of them are in unconscious recognition that things, including standards of taste, were not as they could and should be. They are a part of the search for fresh forms having more significance in relation to their era.

In this zestful search the designers and builders were willing to try all forms, including the historical. They did not hesitate to try and put them all in the same building. Unhampered by scholarship and guided by no tradition, they produced some tartling combinations and disastrous re-ults. These are a part of the ferment that elped to produce fresh forms.

We hear much talk now of the need for good taste" and "unity" in our environ-ıent. Admittedly they are needed. But one enses that achieving these would mean the acrifice of variety and vitality. Without ıese, taste and unity are meaningless.

Montgomery Schuyler, the first architec-ıral critic in America and a Victorian, rote, "It is more feasible to tame exu-erance than to create a soul under the ibs of death." The great architects of this eriod were men who had the ability to ıme and discipline this exuberance. They ıolded it into buildings that are still highly-harged and powerful statements about the ulture of their time.

If we think of the Victorians as straight-ıced and stuffy, we should realize that this s only one aspect of their personality, the reat discipline that must have been neces-ıry to tame this exuberance about which ıeir buildings speak so eloquently.

The Importance of a Proper Breakfast

Eating right, nutritionally, at the beginning of the day, is the key to controlling weight and feeling fit and vigorous

By MIRANDA BALL

With all the journalistic hubbub about reducing your caloric intake and the dangers of obesity some basic common-sense truths are being obscured.

Here is the proposition in a nutshell: A proper breakfast reduces the appetite for the rest of the day, so you aren't trapped into overeating at lunch and dinner. A proper breakfast lowers the "appestat" (hunger motive) for the rest of the day, enabling you to control your calorie intake within reason. But it also stabilizes your energy level, without those "sinking spells" and rushes of fatigue.

It's really only common sense. The body does not go to sleep at night. The brain, all the organs, all the cells continue their work, even though you are asleep. Energy is being used all night. Energy comes from the "burning" of food. Since you have no food from dinner at night till waking—a period of 8 to 12 hours—you have used up a lot of energy (food). So the body is depleted by arising time. It needs to be restocked, or it will make demands on your reserves.

The usual quick breakfast (fruit juice, a cereal product, and a beverage) is not enough. These supply fuel for energy for too short a time, for these are quick-burning nutrients. By around 11 A. M. the energy value of such foods will be used up, and you feel weak, tired, inattentive. You feel hungry, you become inefficient.

The "coffee break" at this time does not really remedy the situation. Coffee alone stimulates the brain, but there is no food value in it for the brain to use. Coffee with crullers or some other form of pastry merely compounds the flaw of the earlier breakfast. You take in more calories without rounding out the nutritional needs. You may kill your hunger this way, but you are still undernourished.

A proper breakfast must contain proteins, carbohydrates, and fats, plus the necessary vitamins, minerals and, especially, the trace elements. Sufficient protein in the breakfast menu helps prevent that late forenoon lag. Breakfasts of equal caloric value, but low in protein and high in fat or carbohydrate, do not have this beneficial effect. Breakfasts sufficiently high in protein content elevate the blood-sugar level for approximately 4 hours after the meal. Sensations of hunger and weakness are associated with low blood-sugar levels.

The classic American breakfast—citrus juice, two eggs, two slices of toast, butter, and a beverage with cream or milk—is about right in fulfilling the nutritional demands of the body. By eating a proper breakfast, you do not experience the desire to overeat at lunch and dinner.

But, you say, I don't like the classic American breakfast. Or you say, it disagrees with me.

All right. There is a wide variety of other foods that give you the necessary syndrome of proteins, carbohydrates, fats, vitamins, and minerals. But it is the energy-producing protein that you must be sure not to leave out. If you don't like eggs, substitute meat or cheese or milk. Many people in Europe have been eating cheese for breakfast for years. Why shouldn't you? Hamburger patties are certainly just as tasty at 8 A. M. as at noon. And a toasted cheese sandwich, garnished with bacon crumbles, is great with a glass of milk.

The possibilities are endless. (Please turn to page 110)

Water

You may not think of water lilies as cut flowers, but they are excellent. The flowers hold their form and color for three to five days if the stems are kept in water. The flowers will continue to open and close on schedule after cutting. But you can often keep them open by plunging stems in ice water as soon as they are cut or by dropping paraffin inside the flower at the base of the petals. This is the variety Gladstone. Cutting stems under water will help the flowers stay fresh longer.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS FROM THREE SPRINGS FISHERIES

This is a lotus, a near relative of the water lily, but quite a different plant. The great round leaves, like inverted parasols, rise well above the water and the flowers are on individual stems. This dramatic upright form makes the lotus a fine background plant for a collection of water lilies. The lily foliage floats, and the flowers are borne quite near the surface. This is Nelumbium (nelumbo) alba striata.

Lilies

are easier than you may think

All they really need is the right start in a pool. They will do the rest

This fresh cool corner of the garden needs no weeding, spraying, hoeing, or watering. One of the joys of pool-gardening is the easy care. Once the planting is done there is little to worry about. Pool in the garden of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Closuit. Marie and Arthur Berger, landscape architects.

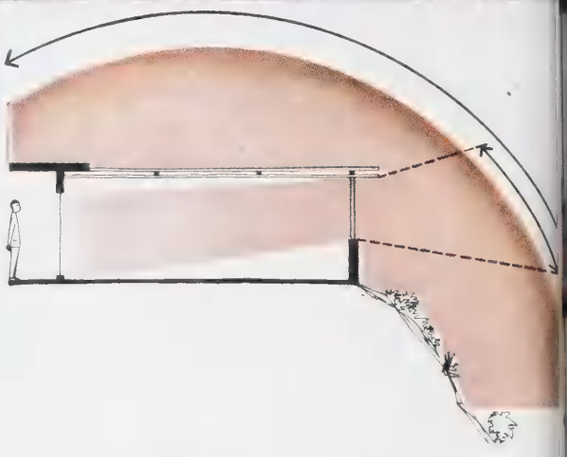
● It's a rare gardener who can look at a water lily in bloom and not wish to have it at home. The crisp form, clear color, and lush foliage rising, somehow, from the depths, put this plant in a class by itself. But the need for a pool to put them in and the question of how to grow them in their watery environment are enough to discourage many who could very well have and enjoy them.



The truth of the matter is that water lilies are easy to grow. You can have them in any climate in America if you choose the right kind. There are only a few definite requirements, but even the experts don't all agree on these, as you'll see when you read the fine print in the catalogs.

As for the pool, if you can provide a container of water 18 to 24 inches across and 16 inches deep you can grow the miniature water lilies. A pool 3 feet square and 18 to 24 inches deep will support a full-sized hardy lily. And, of course, the larger the area, the more you can have. A pool 6 by 8 feet, for example, will handle five hardy lilies or two of the tropicals. The depth can remain the same. The lilies need a sunny situation, and the pool should be placed where leaves will not fall in and foul the water.

The pool itself can be a concrete shell you have built yourself, or a prefabricated fiber glass pool that is simply set in the ground. There are also wooden tubs and containers that will make suitable ready-made pools. A standpipe drain will keep the water from overflowing in case of rain. (Please turn to page 118)

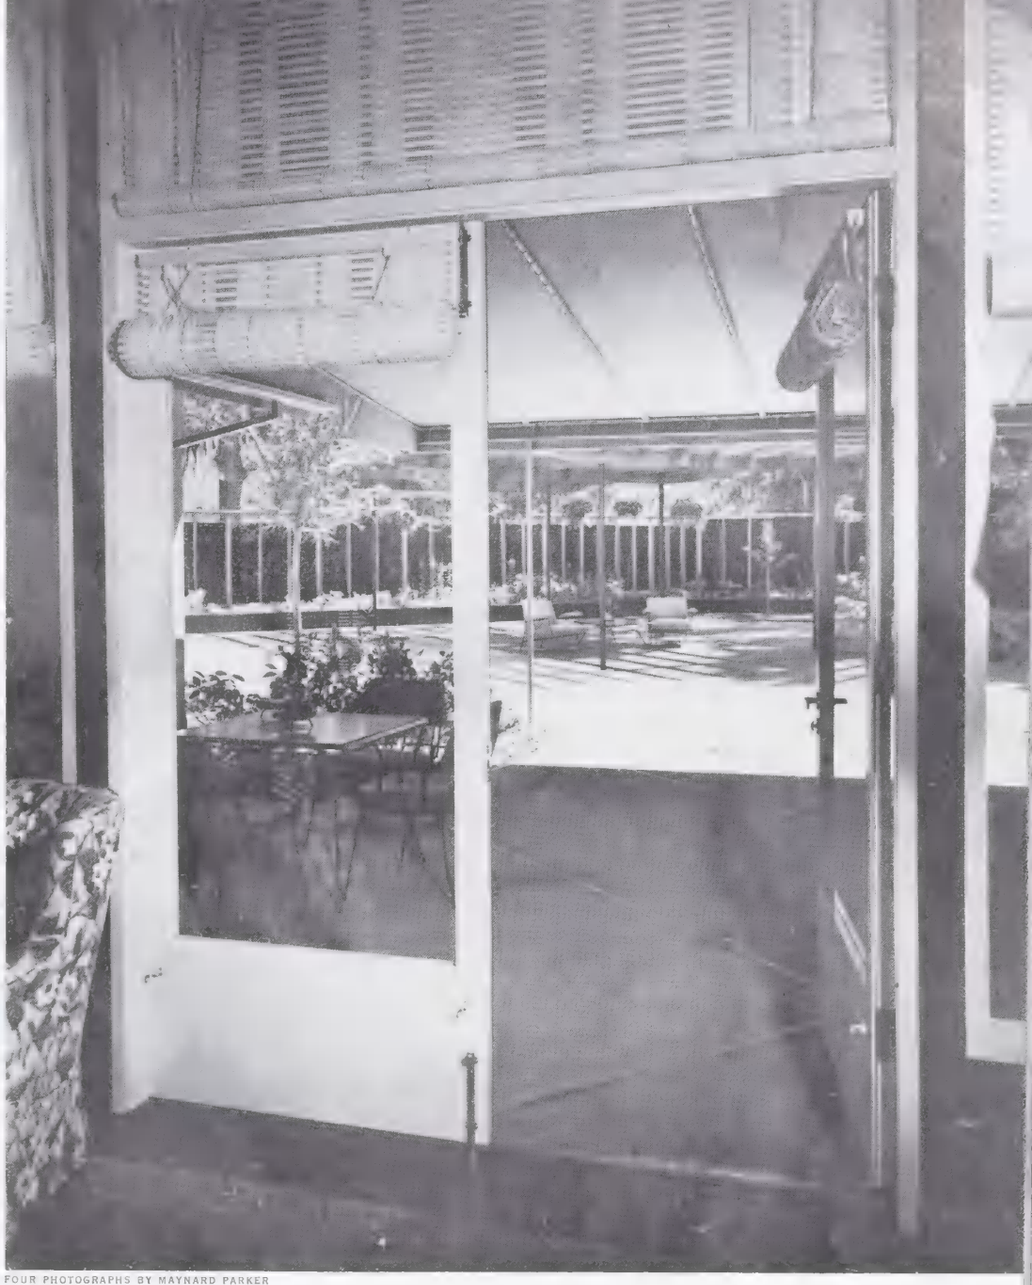
How to fight Sky-Shine — a new understanding of an old summer enemy



By GUY HENLE

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S
CLIMATE
PROJECT

Shading the direct rays of the sun does only part of the job in combating summer's heat. In high-humidity weather—those "white-sky" days—the whole circle of sky becomes a dazzling shell with dust and moisture particles radiating heat at you (and your house) as surely as the sun itself

Looking out from the interior of this house (right) only bits of sky can be seen. FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

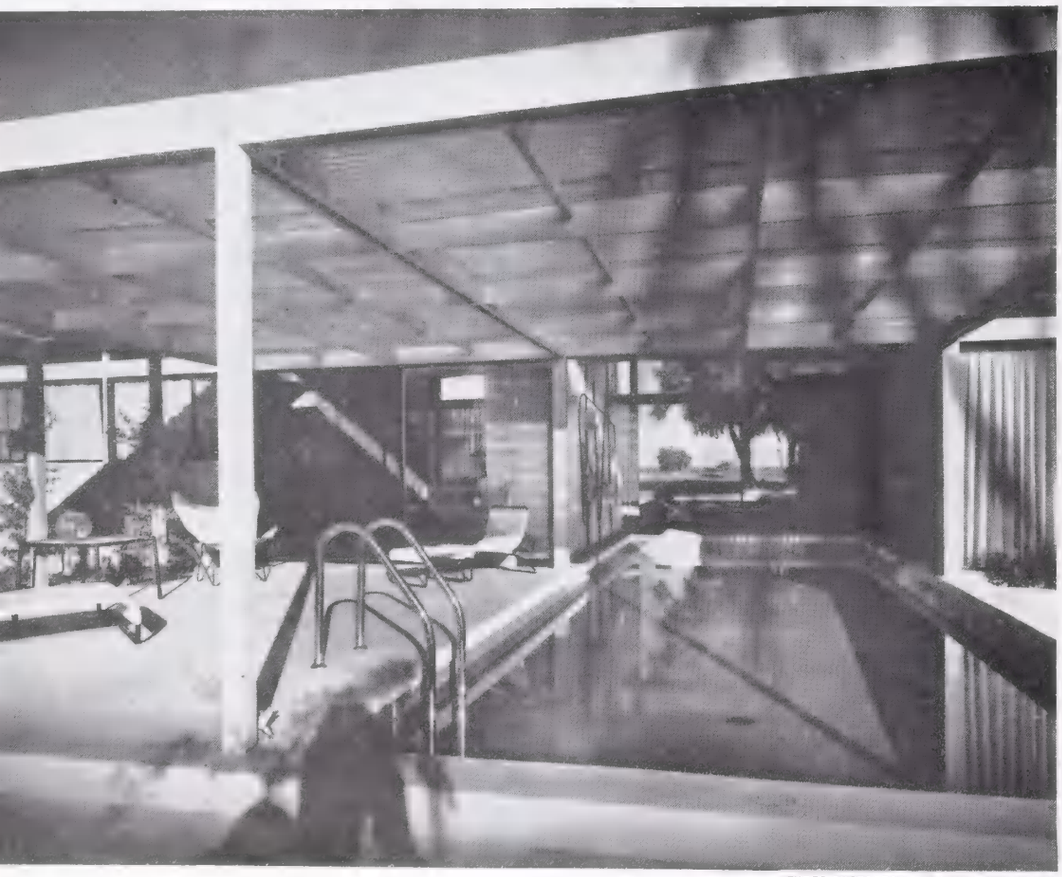
● The ways of summer heat are many and varied. Some of them we know by instinct, others we learn by experience. We don't have to be physicists to know that we can be badly sunburned on a hazy and seemingly sunless day, though we may not have realized exactly why. On such days, often called "white-sky" days because the blue is obscured, the layer of atmosphere close to the earth is filled with tiny particles of smoke, dust, and moisture. Even though you may be shaded from the direct rays of the sun, these particles act as tiny mirrors, reflecting heat at you from all sides. Thus, on these hazy, high-humidity days you are surrounded by millions of criss-crossing heat rays.

The importance of this phenomenon as a source of summer heat was underlined during the many years of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's Climate Control researches. We have labeled it "sky-shine." It does not occur on clear, sparkling blue-sky days. At these times the heat comes directly from the sun. On such days, even the simple shade of an umbrella gives you relief. This explains why, in such tropical atmospheres as Mexico City, you can experience burning sun, yet feel cool when you step into the shade. In the typical muggy atmosphere of much of the U. S., no such relief is possible.

Once you understand sky-shine, you realize that the usual shade-control devices designed for our houses are not enough, for they are planned to keep out the direct rays of the sun. Assuming equal importance is protection against sky-shine, which surrounds us from horizon line to horizon line, reaching us as easily from the usually safe north as from the south.



How can you protect yourself against sky-shine? On these pages and the ones that follow you'll see examples of how it is done. The key is the actual amount of sky that can be seen from the house. The less sky you can see, the less heat. The section drawings indicate roughly the total sky area that would have been visible from the house and the area (Please turn the page) that is still seen after structural changes were made.

In some cases a patio awning attached to the house works in combination with a distant vertical garden fence to cut down the sky area. In others, a free-standing terrace cover is strategically placed so that it forms a sky barrier for the house too. After you study these situations, one additional fact becomes clear: a high, exposed location is much more vulnerable to sky-shine than a low, hill-surrounded spot. If you think about it for a minute, you'll realize how much more sky area surrounds a house on the top of a hill. This becomes an additional factor to consider in purchasing land or in locating a house on an existing property, particularly in those parts of the country where hazy, muggy days are common in summer. Obviously, sky-shine is only one of many factors affecting the location and orientation of a house, but it is a new and important one.

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY JULIUS SHULMAN

Roof shading this pool also helps keep sky-shine out of house itself

Set on the valley floor in Palm Springs, California, this house has the advantage of mountains rising around it on several sides. These work as a natural shield against sky-shine, reducing the amount of sky reflection into the house proper. In planning a swimming pool, the owners wanted the advantage of indoor and outdoor use, so the pool actually runs right through the outside wall of the house, with sliding doors to cut it off in the center. You can see how this works in the three pictures here. To shade the outdoor section, they built a translucent roof. Seen from the interior, this roof neatly meets the top of the mountain (below) so that the only sky seen is through the clerestory window. H. J. Bligh residence; Williams, Williams, and Williams, architects.

Reflected heat of atmosphere on "white-sky" days can reach interior of this house only through the small clerestory window, already partly shaded by roof overhang. Structure over pool also reduces bright glare from outside, which could have made use of pool uncomfortable on eyes.

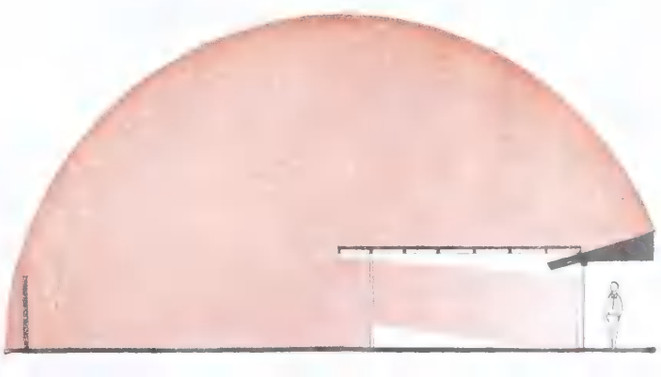
This terrace cover leaves only a strip of sky visible, makes it comfortable to sit in the house and look out from it



TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Cutting down the amount of sky-shine that comes into the house should result in an actual lowering of the temperature. But this is only part of the comfort that is achieved. It is annoying and, to some persons, physically fatiguing to sit in a darkened area looking out into a glaring, overbright light. The house seen here is in Texas, where the foliage does not give the protection it does in New England. Even with air conditioning, this house could have been uncomfortable to sit in if you looked out across an expanse of paving to the brilliant horizon all around. The terrace cover therefore serves (1) to shade the terrace, (2) to cut down the glare from overhead, and (3) to kill the glare bouncing off the pavement. Above, you see the impression of a cool retreat given by a view from the interior. Home of David Stone; Cliff May, designer; Thomas Church, landscape architect.

More photographs on next four pages

Drawing at right shows how much protection is given by the deep terrace roof. The further out the roof is carried, the less sky-shine will reach the house itself. Above, you get some idea of the open country in which the house sits —and why protection of this kind was an improvement.

FIVE PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

The trellis-like roof shading the sitting area on this terrace also cuts down the amount of sky visible from the interior. The high garden wall, designed primarily for privacy, also does its share in keeping sky-shine from making this room uncomfortable. # There are many new ways to fight the sun, to put the shade where you want it

Every year there are new developments in the unending battle against the sun. This year there are some radical new approaches to the traditional terrace umbrella, both in size and design. The two you see on this page are on a big scale, like awnings that used to be attached to the house, but they are positioned to throw the shade out in the open garden. Though the framework on which they hang is permanently installed, the covers can be adjusted to place substantial shade wherever it can best be used. On the following two pages are five portable shading devices—four new umbrella designs and one vertical sun protector. The answer to your sun-shade and sky-shine problem should be found among these solutions.

Are you giving your children a Balanced Cultural Diet?

Will they acquire a taste for fine literature, music, and art simply by growing up? In this era of TV and comic books, a little forced feeding is necessary, says House Beautiful's Family Editor

By MARVA SHEARER

There was a time when I thought children's appetites for cultural fare developed naturally and gradually, reflecting the parents' interests and level of taste. Bit by bit, I assumed, they would acquire an ear for music and an eye for beauty. I supposed that eventually they, too, would thirst for what is good and show a distaste for the dreadful, just as their eating preferences change from zwieback to something more nourishing.

Now, I'm not so sure.

I tried the passive approach for the first dozen years of our family life, with the dismal result that at age twelve our "bright" boy had never heard of Carl Sandburg. And when the nine-year-old answered "Michaelangelo" for the author of Romeo and Juliet on an achievement test, I decided it was time for forced feeding.

Obviously, in today's market there are so many pleasurable and simple-minded avenues of entertainment that the classics suffer by competition. Comic books, television programs, teen-age vocalists, and even ball games can easily occupy young minds to the complete exclusion of anything deep, difficult, or lasting.

I am also sadly aware that most elementary and secondary schools have neither the time nor the inclination to put forth a varied and qualitative effort at raising the youngsters' cultural sights. And certainly, if left to their own initiative, the children themselves will all take the easiest course and mature only to the intellectual level of their closest friends.

In the final analysis, then, a balanced cultural diet, like good eating habits, is the responsibility of parents who want to see their children well-rounded. As with an expanding appreciation of food, you can't start too soon exposing them to a wide range of choices.

But how? Where? When? And with what sort of delicacies should you begin?

Summer, it seems to me, is the best possible time to start this sort of diet. Up till now, if you're a typical parent, you've probably had the children enrolled in some form of music or ballet class. They're accustomed to visiting a library regularly and their television viewing is supervised. Still, this is hardly a full, rich serving of the humanities. And the easiest way to remedy this cultural under-nourishment, I've found, is to introduce the youngsters to everything you enjoy—to concerts, art exhibits, plays, foreign languages, poetry, new recordings, good literature, and so on. The possibilities are endless and depend only on you.

The reason summer is such a wonderful time for including the children in your own cultural life is because so much that is worth while is presented in a light, informal manner. Concerts are held out of doors in places like New York's Lewisohn Stadium, Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell, and Boston's Esplanade. Summer stock is put on in circus tents and barns, and many of the touring art shows are hung in public gardens and municipal park museums. Invariably, these are cool, quiet, and refreshing places in which to spend a summer afternoon or evening with a family.

I have also found that "taking the family along" creates amusing incidents that never seem to happen when my husband and I go alone. For example, the time we took our three to a Van Gogh exhibit they seemed overwhelmed with the vibrancy and color of the real canvases as compared with the reproductions we'd shown them. They studied every painting earnestly and with delight. Only later did the littlest one remark to his father: "Daddy, I never knew that a man with red hair would have a red beard." He was thinking, of course, of Van Gogh's self-portrait as a young man.

On another occasion we rather hesitantly took them to a theatre-in-the-round production of King Lear. They loved it. The Shakespearean storms, mad scenes, and duels were just their dish. For days afterward the boys innocently referred to one another as the bastard son.

Although "togetherness" has its merits, it can also fall flat. When children are small, there aren't enough cultural experiences satisfying to both age groups. The in-between compromise you hope will entertain you as well as the children can often leave you irritable and them restless. So in our case, I usually try to work out some summer study designed solely for me and the kids. This conscious effort to whet their palates is what I think of as cultural forced feeding. Year by year it is producing more interests we can enjoy together.

One season it was Spanish. We began with fifteen-minute lessons three times a week. The younger children weren't old enough to read so most of our learning was in the form of games, songs, and crayoning. They didn't object at all, as I was afraid they might. It was more like play than learning. Rather than rebelling at being called away from their friends and hectic outdoor games, the quarter hours had a calming effect that absorbed and refreshed us all.

After the summer start, we've continued the language lessons for an hour once a week. The children's progress isn't phenomenal, but their awareness of foreign words and phrases is considerable. Now, Gordo, Zorro, and Tonto have meaning for them other than their comic-strip significance, and Spanish-speaking friends no longer start them giggling. If they're attentive, they can catch a familiar phrase and feel the satisfaction of being bi-lingual.

Last year our summer project was a casual but determined effort to increase everyone's knowledge and familiarity with good music. It started with the playing of recordings of Tchaikovsky's and Dvorak's music because they were to be a part of a Van Cliburn program for which we had tickets. We wanted the children to be able, at least, to recognize the selections, but they surprised me—and themselves—by knowing the "Goin' home" theme from Dvorak's From the New World Symphony and the love motif from the Romeo and Juliet overture. They had just never listened to the music played by a symphony orchestra.

In addition to playing and replaying the records, we bought a collection of short biographies of composers and looked up Tchaikovsky's and Dvorak's life. The album notes also provided pertinent background information, but again it was something irrelevant that caught the youngsters' fancy. They loved the name of Tchaikovsky's childhood governess, Fanny Durbach, and used it indiscriminately for weeks. All of which is fine with me because it makes intellectual growth a light-hearted affair and not a bore.

Music, however, is not my forte. This has been a blind (or deaf) spot in my own education, so I've had to turn to other sources for our summer music study. The Learn for Pleasure series of records in which Milton Cross explains the instruments of the orchestra and The Magic of Music, by Milton Cross and Ernest La Prade, are helpful and fun. Howard Taubman's book, How to Bring Up Your Child to Enjoy Music, Leonard Bernstein's published TV lectures, and the paperback books by Aaron Copland, Oscar Thompson, and Carter Harman have been my guides and reference library.

Then, just as Spanish has become a part of our year-round living, so Monday nights are dinner-concert nights. The children and I take turns selecting numbers to play on the Hi-Fi. They tell us what they know of the composer or the performing artist and generally make an effort to put on a program. Naturally, we do listen to music other evenings, too, but Mondays are theirs to plan and think about.

At the moment, our home-study effort is focused on art. With the Metropolitan Museum Seminar Series as a start supplemented with our own books and miscellaneous knowledge on the subject, my husband and I are exploring the visual field with the children. We have just started, but already the children are fascinated by Chagall's angels and Picasso's two-directional women. They are full of extraneous questions about the martyrdom of St. Sebastian and Hieronymus Bosch's notions of salvation and damnation. Having grown accustomed to the idea of learning, sharing, and investigating a particular field together, our three wholly enjoy the practice.

When we first began this prolonged effort to enlarge our children's scope, I felt that ours was a unique case. It seemed that other homes were either more endowed with talent than ours—with their family-participation musicales, sketching picnics, and home newspapers—or else they went to the other extreme and simply didn't care. It was only with closer investigation that I found I was wrong. There are many talented and civic-minded groups who actively plan and promote all sorts of cultural activities for children.

Five years ago in Los Angeles, for example, a group of mothers under the leadership of Dorothy Allen, wife of the chancellor of the University of Southern California at Los Angeles, organized a series of Junior Programs. Their aim was to acquaint children in the (Please turn to page 111)

A House Beautiful CLASSIC

Every so often HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's editors come upon a piece of furniture that deserves singling out for your special attention, by virtue of its versatility, good looks, quality, and value at its price.

When we find such a piece we permit its maker to tag it with the label of a "HOUSE BEAUTIFUL Classic" and a "Good Buy."

This month we nominate this slender, rolling, extendible table from the "Saga Group" made by Broyhill Furniture Factories of Lenoir, N. C. It is the sort of piece most people can easily visualize in their homes because its design has a quiet, unassertive quality that lets it harmonize with existing furnishings. You could hardly find a table to match it in versatility. Rolling on brass-hooded casters, it can be a serving cart, a mobile buffet, a dining table or a most obliging writing desk. When not in movable use, it can stand handsomely as a wall console or a sofa table. Its 29½″ height puts it at convenient level for every one of its uses.

How to shop for a Room Air Conditioner

What size do you need?

How important is humidity control?

What are the minimum "quality" features?

Will you have to re-wire your house?

What is the truth about filtering and fresh-air claims?

By JONATHAN ALEY

This year's crop of room air conditioners comes in countless sizes, shapes, and styles. In general, they are slimmer, trimmer, and better-looking than anything you could find a few years ago. Most units can be installed flush with inside walls and have hidden controls, simplified grillwork, and a minimum of tasteless trim. Even more important, their capacities are more accurately rated.

The range is wide, from small portables to hefty consoles, from units to cool a small bedroom in a mild climate to those that will handle three or four rooms under extreme conditions. There are many special models for special situations: to fit casement windows, to go through walls without blocking windows, to be located completely away from outside walls, to supply supplemental heat, to simplify do-it-yourself installation, to run on ordinary household current.

The list is endless and the claims for special-feature gimmicks confusing. How do you separate what is important, so you can pick the right machine for your situation? There is obviously no one unit that is best for everyone. To make an intelligent choice, you must understand a little about the basic function and operation of the room air conditioner.

Proper size is important

When a room air conditioner is properly sized to meet the cooling needs of a given space, it does an excellent job of controlling both temperature and humidity. However, don't trust a rule-of-thumb approach on size, since a unit that is too big will do as bad a job as one that is too small. An over-sized unit will also cost more and may call for more expensive wiring. Even though it may cool the room adequately, it will not control humidity, and the room may feel clammy. Undersized equipment, of course, will not cool the room sufficiently during really hot weather.

There is only one sure way to size an air conditioner properly—someone must calculate the cooling requirements (often called the "heat gain") for the particular room. Heat gain is measured in units called British Thermal Units or BTUs. One BTU is the amount of heat required to change the temperature of one pound of water one degree Fahrenheit. Cooling ratings for room air conditioners are now usually given in BTUs per hour.

In addition to their BTU ratings, many units are still rated in "tons" or "horsepower." To emphasize how meaningless these ratings are, a recent National Better Business Bureau report revealed that seven different so-called 1-horsepower units made by the same manufacturer had ratings ranging from 6,500 to 12,000 BTUs. So-called 1-ton units made by different manufacturers ranged from 8,000 to 11,709 BTUs. The report also pointed out that, since the BTU ratings are occasionally mis-stated by fly-by-night manufacturers, you should insist on seeing proof that the rating has been reliably measured according to NEMA Standard CN 1-1958 or ARI Standard 110-58. These are acceptable rating systems and units that conform to them are usually so marked on the manufacturer's name plate.

In determining the cooling needs of any space, calculating charts are used to measure the amount of heat in BTUs that will pass through the various building materials or will leak through cracks and openings. The sum of all these different heat gains is equal to the amount of BTUs you need to cool the room.

When you buy an air conditioner at a cut-price from a discount house, a department store, or an appliance dealer, the margin of profit is so small that the salesman will rarely offer to make a careful calculation of your cooling requirements. He probably uses a rule of thumb based on room size, possibly including orientation. He may ask whether the room is under a hot roof. This is not enough information to size equipment accurately. If you give him specific information about insulation, amount of window area, weather stripping, and tight or loose house construction, the salesman may make a heat-gain calculation using manufacturer's tables. If he won't make an accurate calculation and tries to discount its importance, you should not accept the size he suggests, even though he may give you the best price in town.

Central heating and air-conditioning contractors sometimes sell room air conditioners too. Because they know how to calculate heat loss and heat gain for central systems, they are more likely to calculate your heat gain more accurately. They may also be more conscientious about your electrical requirements, about details of installation, and about guarantees. These are service items, however, and you must pay for them. As a result, these dealers may charge more for a given unit than it would cost at a discount house.

Since you are the person most concerned with your future comfort, it is a good idea to double-check the dealer's recommendations. You can do this by using HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's Air-Conditioning Calculator (offered below).

Similar rooms can have different needs

To emphasize the importance of careful sizing, we calculated the heat gain in two similar 11 x 15 bedrooms. Both rooms are assumed to be on the second floor of two-story houses in the same town, and both have identical windows. One room, on the northeast corner of a reasonably well-insulated house, has year-round, double-glazed windows and is over occupied living space. It shows a cooling need of about 4,800 BTUs per hour. In contrast, the second bedroom faces the southwest, has no insulation, no double-glazed windows, and is over an open carport. It would require almost 9,000 BTUs per hour to keep it comfortable. Rule-of-thumb sizing might have dictated the same unit for both rooms.

After you have made your calculation, you may find that there is no air conditioner with exactly the BTU rating you need. Opinion seems to vary among the experts as to whether you should select a slightly over-sized unit or a slightly under-sized one.

One group feels that a slightly under-sized unit will give you better humidity control, which is important to every-day comfort. This is because an under-sized unit will have to operate almost all the time during hot humid weather. While cooling, the unit will condense moisture out of the air more or less continuously. If, on the other hand, the unit is over-sized for the room's needs, the cooling unit will cycle on and off as called for by the thermostat, making dehumidification more erratic.

Another group of experts votes for the slightly over-sized unit. They contend that since cooling is the primary need, you want extra capacity for extremely hot days or for the times when a large group of people is in the room (and people contribute a lot of BTUs).

The truth of the matter seems to be that slight under- or over-sizing is not too critical. A room calculated to need an 8,000-BTU unit will not be uncomfortable with a 7,000-BTU unit or a 9,000-BTU unit. Within this range, more variation in the comfort level is created by individual habits than by the equipment. Someone who demands a lot of fresh air, leaves the doors open inadvertently, or goes in and out of the room often, will cause more difference in the temperature and humidity level of the room than a rated capacity difference of 1,000 BTUs. If a unit seems to be a little under-sized after it is installed, you can often provide the necessary cooling by starting the unit earlier in the day to get a head-start on the peak heat load in the afternoon. If the unit seems to be over-sized, you can compensate by letting a little of the cooling spill out into adjacent rooms.

How important is humidity control?

While cooling the air that passes through it, an air conditioner also reduces the humidity. You need only look at the cooling coil to prove this to yourself. Whenever the cooling cycle is in operation, the coil is wet with moisture condensed out of the air. However, room units differ considerably in their moisture-removing ability. Since the common complaint about hot weather is "It's not the heat, it's the humidity," at first glance it seems that your best buy would always be the unit that will remove the most moisture from the air.

It is true that high humidity is a comfort problem at high temperatures but recent tests indicate that, at normal room temperatures, most people are comfortable at relative humidities ranging from 30% to 85%. If windows are kept closed, almost any properly (Please turn the page)

Because maximum comfort depends primarily on proper sizing, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL *had its consultant, C. W. "Bill" Nessell, develop a special air-conditioning calculator. sized room unit can keep the humidity well within this range, since it only has to remove from the air excess moisture that leaks in or moisture that is produced within the room.

All air conditioners use up part of their BTU capacity to remove moisture from the air. A typical well-engineered 10,000-BTU room unit uses about 2,500 BTUs for constant dehumidification and the remaining 7,500 BTUs for cooling. This is considered a practical comfort-producing level by most air-conditioning engineers. A unit that removes more moisture will do less cooling. Units with exceptionally high moisture-removing capacities do exist but since comfort depends primarily on cooling the air in the room, it is not wise to buy one unless you live in an extremely high humidity area or are particularly sensitive to humidity. If you do buy such a unit, you should probably compensate for its somewhat reduced cooling capacity by choosing a slightly over-sized model.

A few room air conditioners offer special humidity controls. One type has, in effect, a humidistat in addition to a thermostat. When the humidity is high, this control bypasses the thermostat, keeping the unit on until the humidity is reduced to the desired level. This may tend to over-cool the room, but the manufacturer claims it doesn't lower the temperature enough to create real discomfort.

Another room air conditioner has an adjustable humidity control in addition to its thermostat. The unit cools the air to get out the moisture and then, if the room is already cool, re-heats the air before releasing it. When no cooling is wanted, the unit can operate, in effect, simply as a dehumidifier without any cooling. This feature costs about $40 extra and it may be worth-while in high-humidity areas.

The "clammy cold" feeling of air conditioning that many people have experienced at one time or another is almost always due to over-sized equipment. Such equipment may actually lower temperature too much and, as previously mentioned, will cycle on and off too frequently to do a good job of humidity reduction. Most units will do more dehumidification in relation to cooling when set on "low" cooling. If you get that clammy feeling, a shift to low cooling usually cures it.

How do you judge quality?

Once you know how big an air conditioner you need, you will find that for any given BTU rating there is quite a price variation among different models and brands offered by the same dealer.

For example, machines of about 8,000 BTUs may range in price from $200 to $300 at a discount house. And usually, as with any equipment you buy, there are very few real bargains. And there are real reasons for the differences in price.

Sometimes the lowest-price machine is a "loss-leader." This may be an unknown brand or a specially stripped-down model of a well-known brand modified to order for a large dealer. Such a model may not even be listed in the manufacturer's regular price list and descriptive literature. The first three features listed below will usually identify a stripped model. Their combined removal from an otherwise good machine will certainly reduce its price considerably but will also limit its effectiveness as an air conditioner.

Below is a list of points to check in considering quality versus price. You can check some of them visually; others may require asking the dealer to show you the manufacturer's specification sheets.

1. Is there an adjustable thermostat control? This is the first thing to be removed in cutting the cost of a machine. Without it you will have to turn the cooling cycle on and off manually to keep the room at an even temperature. Obviously it is an important part of any automatic machine.

2. Does the fan have more than one speed? Once a room has cooled down, a lower fan speed will usually keep you comfortable at a much lower noise level. Also, as previously mentioned, you can get a little more dehumidification when the fan is running at lower speed. Furthermore, because of an enforced equipment location, you may need to use the different speeds to create comfort in different situations. Some large capacity units even offer three fan speeds.

3. Can you adjust the patterns of air flow? Almost all machines except "loss-leaders" and a few small "portables" have movable grilles or adjustable deflectors for shifting the air-flow patterns. Before you make a final choice between two otherwise equal machines, decide how their air-flow patterns will suit the planned location of the air conditioner in your house. Obviously, if you want to install the machine in the end of a long, narrow room, you'll need a machine that can direct the air in a long, narrow pattern.

On the other hand, if the conditioner must go in the middle of the long side of the same room you want to be able to deflect the air in a wide fan to either side.

In setting up any air deflection pattern, it is best if the air can be forced up as well as to the side you want. Since cold air is heavy, if the air is aimed at the floor as it leaves the machine, it will form an ankle-chilling blanket on the floor without ever cooling the air above it. Also, it may be drawn back through the intake ports before it can spread out into the room. This will not only reduce the spread of cool air in the room but will also fool the thermostat in the air conditioner into shutting off before the room is really cool.

4. What kind of rust-proofing has been applied to the metal parts? Rust can kill an air conditioner faster than anything else. The most critical parts of the machine are the exposed parts outside the room and in the evaporator pan and coil area, all of which are thoroughly wet whenever the machine is cooling. Some air conditioners—primarily the loss-leaders—are painted steel. Better protection against rust is achieved with bonderized and enameled parts, coatings of epoxy enamels, heavy asphalt coatings, zinc coating and enameling, or use of plastics or rust-proof metals like brass, or aluminum.

There is even one premium-priced model, using monel, brass, and stainless steel, that is designed particularly to resist the corrosive salt air at the seashore.

5. How noisy is the machine? As yet, no standards of measurement have been applied to room air-conditioner noise levels. It is hard to judge the (Continued on page 107)

Now! 4 Onion Dressings no one can buy

The very first onion dressings

...make them with this new GOOD SEASONS MIX!

Good Seasons Onion Dressing. So different, so delicious. A light, fresh dressing with an herb-spice base, flecks of sweet, red peppers, and a provocative touch of onion. Flavorful, but never sharp! Takes just seconds to mix. Easy directions are on the Good Seasons envelope. You combine your favorite oil, vinegar and a little water with the Mix. The water, or a substitute liquid, makes the blend smoother. (A continental chef's secret!) You can use many substitutes, vary the dressing to your own special taste. See the recipes below for delicious suggestions.

Creamy Onion Dressing for Cole Slaw. Prepare the Good Seasons Dressing but substitute either sour cream or mayonnaise for the water. This dressing, stirred into shredded cabbage salads, ends all that teary business of chopping onions. And the flavor is evenly distributed, subtle. hooray!

Onion-Orange Dressing. In making the dressing, use orange juice instead of water. New and very good on all fruit salads. Or, on a green salad that has either orange sections or canned mandarin oranges (so easy), and a sprinkle of blue cheese chunks.

amount of noise a machine produces by listening to it in a showroom. For one thing, you will be able to hear the noise made by the parts of the machine that ordinarily project outside the room. On the other hand, the background noise level of the showroom will probably make the machine sound quieter there than it will when you get it into your quieter home. You can, however, make a few simple tests. First, make sure that the salesman turns the machine on "high cooling" (he may turn it on "low ventilate" to hold down the noise). Second, listen with your ear down close to the machine where the air comes out. Compare the noise level of several different machines this way.

Noise will be affected by the way the machine is made. Heavier construction and thicker metal will vibrate less than light tinny workmanship. Tight joints—welded or with the sheet metal screws set in mastic—will reduce the amount of vibration. Most machines use some sound-proofing materials or sound-deadening coatings in the air passages or between the inside and outside section of the equipment. Comparing a loss-leader and a first-rate machine can be educational. To investigate this, you must see the machine with its "jacket off." Otherwise, ask to see the dealer's literature, which usually shows a picture of the inner workings.

Noise will also be affected by the installation. If the machine is not firmly mounted, it will inevitably create vibration noise. A loose-fitting window sash above the air conditioner can add to the vibration noise level. Any noise-creating equipment will be noisier in a room with bare walls, floors, and ceilings. Rugs, draperies, furniture, and acoustical tile—all of these reduce apparent noise in the room.

6. Is the chassis removable from the case? Though only the lowest-priced units and some of the portables are built with integral cases, it is worth investigation. If the chassis is not removable, and you have a service call, the repair man may charge you for complete re-installation since he has to remove the entire unit from the window to get at any part of it. This may be a matter of $25.

7. What does the warranty really mean? Almost all units carry a manufacturer's guarantee of one year for all parts and five years for the compressor and perhaps the entire refrigeration circuit. This does not cover labor costs. Find out who pays for replacement if a part wears out or is defective. Does the dealer guarantee parts and labor when he sells the machine? If not, and something goes wrong, you may find that you will be given a 75¢ part free but that you have to pay $15 to $20 to have it installed. When you buy the machine, you may find that the dealer guarantees labor and parts only if you have him install the equipment. Depending on the size of the unit you buy (small ones do have very simple installation kits now), you will have to decide whether to pay to have the installation and guarantee (roughly $20 to $40) with a one-year service contract or to install the unit yourself and take your chances. When installation instructions are followed carefully, you are not likely to have any trouble. Mechanical failures due to faulty equipment occur in less than 2% of all installations during the first year of operation.

Service contracts

Sometimes you can buy a separate service contract without installation for as little as $10.

Service contracts are fulfilled either by independent service companies or by service men who are part of the air-conditioner dealer's own company. In general, you will get better service in the latter case. Independent service companies may be fly-by-night organizations and may be out of business just when you need them. The service men who work directly for the dealer are likely to be factory-trained and will probably better understand the operation of your air-conditioning unit.

Always read all guarantees and the warranty before you buy or sign anything. Most manufacturers have a warranty card that you are to mail them when you buy the equipment. Send it in. Although most manufacturers will honor their warranty even if you have not mailed them the card, they are not legally obligated to do so.

Air conditioners vary considerably in the amount of power they require. Small units use as little as seven amperes at 115 volts while large models may consume 15 amperes at 230 volts. Models of similar cooling capacity are often available in any of three different voltages: 115, 208, or 230 volts.

A 115-volt unit rated at 7.5 amperes may be installed on an existing 15-ampere circuit that serves little else. A radio and a few lights may be on the same circuit but certainly a toaster, bathroom heater, or washing machine will cause an overload. If you have a recently built house with 20-ampere circuits, you may go as high as a 12-ampere, 115-volt unit on an existing circuit. Because the starting load of an air conditioner is higher than its operating load, replace the ordinary fuse with a so-called time-delay fuse. It will take the starting surge without blowing out but will still provide adequate overload protection. Do not use a fuse larger than the rating of the circuit, 15 or 20 amperes, for it creates a fire hazard.

Will you have to rewire?

If there is no lightly loaded circuit available, you will have to install a special line for the air conditioner, and any unit consuming more than 12 amperes at 115 volts must be installed on its own 230-volt circuit. Often 230-volt air conditioners have a slightly higher BTU cooling capacity for the same initial cost and often have lower operating costs than 115-volt units of equal cooling capacity. Very few 115-volt units can supply as much as 12,000 BTUs, and 115-volt units of this capacity are often inefficient and expensive to operate.

Whenever two small room units are to be used near each other, a single 230-volt circuit may handle both units and cost less to install than two separate 115-volt circuits. In any case, check the capacity of your wiring with an electrician, the dealer, or your local power company (if they perform such a service) to determine whether you need a new circuit or whether your present house wiring can take the extra load. In some cases, particularly if you are adding several room units in an older house, you may have to increase the total wiring capacity of your house (the service entrance and distribution center) to handle the air-conditioning load. This will add from $100 to $200 to the cost of installation.

What about fresh air and filters?

Properly sized room air conditioners do a lot to make you comfortable but don't expect too much from them as air cleaners, air fresheners, germ killers, or odor removers. They are not designed for these jobs. To understand why not, you have to understand how a room unit operates.

HOW TO SHOP FOR A ROOM AIR CONDITIONER

To produce comfortable room conditions efficiently and economically during hot weather, room air conditioners must recirculate the air that is already in the room. Each time this air passes over the cooling coil it is cooled a few degrees. Even after the air temperature in the room is reduced to the desired level, only a small amount of fresh (but hot and humid) air can be added to the inside air without overloading the equipment. Most units permit this, either with a "fresh air" setting or an "exhaust" setting, which opens a vent to the outside. In either case, only a small amount of air passes in or out of the room. Manufacturers give figures ranging from as little as an honest twelve cubic feet per minute (c.f.m.) to over 200 c.f.m. claimed for a few very large heavy-duty units. Most single room units will bring in less than 50 c.f.m. By comparison, a through-the-wall kitchen fan may be rated at 1,000 c.f.m. and a large attic fan may move as much as 12,000 cubic feet per minute. Obviously your room air conditioner isn't designed to give you much fresh outside air. It can't be. No air conditioner—room or central unit—is designed to bring in quantities of hot humid outside air, cool it, and dry it. The operating cost of such a unit would be impossibly high.

The filter problem

As the room air is recirculated, it passes through a filter before reaching the refrigerating coil. Until recently, most units were equipped with one of two filters: a throw-away oiled glass fiber type, or a "permanent" re-usable aluminum mesh filter. Athough these two types are still used, several additional filtering materials are now on the market—both as original equipment with the air conditioner when it is purchased and as replacement filters. There are "permanent" washable open-foam plastic types, various throw-away types made of different synthetic fibers, "electrostatic" filters, and filters containing activated charcoal.

All of these filter materials are used in both room units and central air-conditioning systems. The big difference is that the room unit probably uses a ¼-inch thick filter whereas central systems use filters an inch or even several inches thick. The effectiveness of a filter, though not exactly proportional to its thickness, is certainly very closely related to it.

One of the main reasons that air-conditioner manufacturers put filters in room units is to prevent the wet cooling coil from clogging up with airborne dirt. While protecting the cooling coil, the filter removes a considerable amount of dirt, lint, dust, and pollen from the air. Luckily for hay fever and asthma sufferers, most pollen and other irritant particles are relatively large in size. When a room is kept closed up, an air conditioner will catch a significant percentage of these large irritant particles as the air recirculates through the filter.

What filters can—and cannot—do

Actually, filters for room air conditioners are manufactured to meet the mechanical requirements of the units. Almost any filter material can be made to pick up and hold a given percentage of particles of a specified size if it is thick enough. In general, however, the more effective a filter is, the more resistant it is to the flow of air. As a result, all filters must be designed as a compromise between the amount of air they will let through and the size and quantity of particles they will retain.

Because of size limitations, noise problems, and costs (powerful fans are larger, noisier, and more expensive), the air-moving equipment in room air conditioners cannot push air through very dense filters and, therefore, the filters can only do a fair job of air cleaning. They are certainly not nearly as efficient in this respect as central systems.

Since filters for room units are designed to suit the basically similar air handling ability of all machines, most filters are interchangeable. There are two exceptions. Some of the so-called "electrostatic" filters function only on the air conditioners for which they were designed, and a few of the large-capacity room units use thicker filters than the ¼- to ⅜-inch types usually employed.

Some filters are treated with germ-killing agents. However, there is some question about their germicidal significance in a home where few other materials are treated with germicides and germs from other sources may simply out-breed the filter's killing ability. However, there is one definite benefit created by a germicidal filter. As any filter becomes coated with dirt and lint, it makes a perfect breeding ground for germs, particularly under high-humidity conditions. This is one of the main sources of "stale filter odor." Since filters treated with germ killers reduce this growth, they eliminate most of the smell.

Electrostatic filters should not be confused with electronic air cleaners. Equipment of the latter type is used in expensive residential or commercial central air-conditioning systems. They use extremely high voltage, and a lot of it, to put an electrostatic charge on particles in the air. These particles then pass between many large metal plates having the opposite electrical charge, and are drawn to the plates in the same way that a magnet attracts iron filings.

Units of this type, designed to fit a central system, cost in the neighborhood of $300. Whether a low-priced, low-powered filter of this type designed for room air conditioners is significantly more efficient than ordinary filters is still to be proved. (We have not seen test data permitting comparative evaluation with other types of filters.) A second type of filter uses static electricity, the principle that makes synthetic fabric fiber clothing cling on a dry day. When dry air passes through certain types of fiber filters, dust particles from the air cling to the fibers in a similar way. However, when the air is humid, the effect is negligible.

Activated charcoal filters

Activated charcoal filters, in addition to removing dust, pollen, and dirt, will reduce odors and absorb smoke from the air. Though considerably more expensive than most other throw-away filters, this extra benefit may be worth the price to some people in some situations. If you want this feature, make sure there is a charcoal filter to fit the unit you want.

One significant choice you can make is between throw-away and re-usable filters. You can shift from one to the other at any time for no more than two dollars. Aside from the exceptions previously mentioned, replacement filters of all types are made in common standard sizes and in cut-to-fit kits that can be used with any unit.

Re-usable filters do save you money but they must be washed occasionally in detergent in the kitchen sink. Most open plastic foam types do not require any coating—just wash and re-install. Aluminum mesh itself is not sticky; in fact it is so smooth that dust and dirt will slide right through the filter unless it is re-coated. Use only the fluid specified by the manufacturer when re-coating and follow directions carefully. The fluid is usually available in a spray-can for easy application.

Throw-away filters mean just that. When they are dirty, you buy a new one. In practice, many people vacuum clean them the first time they get dirty to get double the mileage. However, on the second use, the filter will probably clog up sooner, and it should certainly be checked more frequently. When you install a new filter, you are assured of first-rate performance.

How often should you change or clean your filter? There is only one answer—whenever it needs it. Since the amount of filterable material in the air varies tremendously in different houses, there is no hard and fast length-of-time rule about changing or cleaning filters. You should certainly inspect the filter at the beginning of the cooling season and see that it is clean. Under most conditions, a monthly inspection is desirable and two or three cleanings or replacements should see you through the season. Also, you can tell when a filter is thoroughly dirty or loaded, by a reduction in cooling ability, and a noticeable decrease in the amount of air passing through the unit.

Dirty filter indicators are included on a few units. This is a good feature. Indicators are also available as accessories ranging in price from $2 to $6.95.

Good filter maintenance is crucial. Dirty filters not only cause a stale air smell but also cut the unit's cooling ability. If the flow of air is seriously blocked, the filter may be sucked right into the coil and certain filter materials disintegrate when wet. As one expert said, you may have to use a toothpick to scrape up the remains. Reduced air flow may also lower the temperature on the coil so far that the condensed moisture turns to ice. When this happens, most units have a safety device that shuts the unit off to prevent damage to compressor and refrigeration system.

Where should you install the unit?

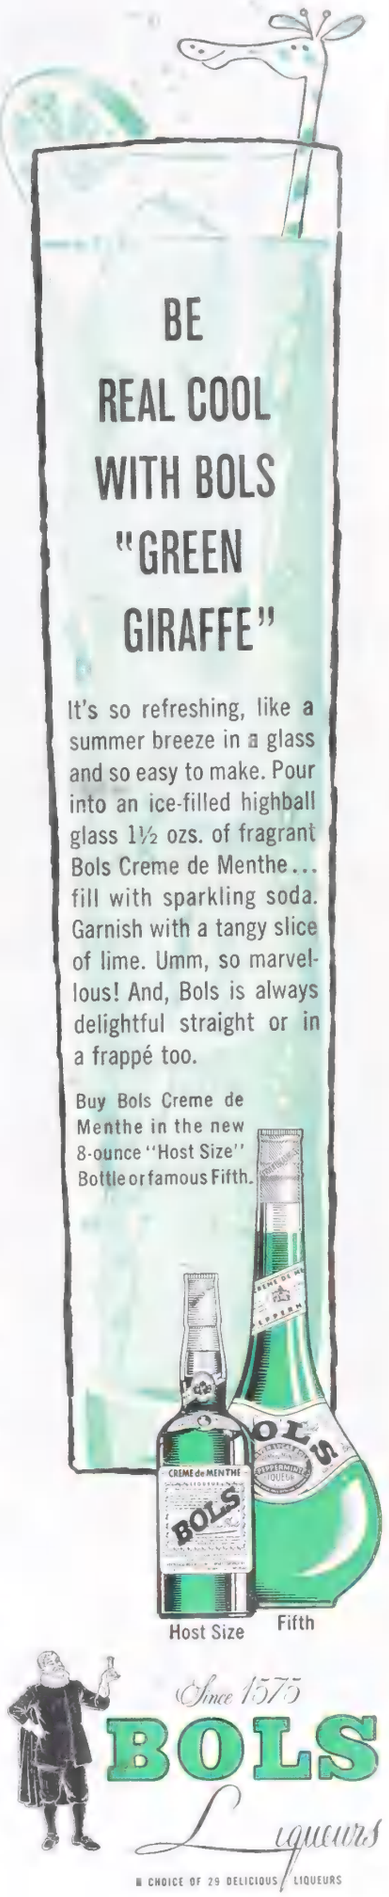
Although your first consideration in locating a room air conditioner is based on how and where it delivers the cool air within the room, you must also remember that part of the unit is outside the house. If the sun doesn't beat down on the machine, it will have an easier job disposing of inside heat. A north-side location will ease its work; so will shading by a tree, a small lattice-covered enclosure or even a canvas awning.

Occasionally, during extremely hot weather, the condensed room moisture will overflow and drip down from the outside of the unit. Choose a location where this won't cause any damage.

If your house is cheek-by-jowl with a neighbor, try to place the unit so it won't dump the heat and noise into his windows.

If your house is right on the building line, the air conditioner projecting beyond the wall may actually cause a zoning violation. Don't let the projection stick out into a busy path or driveway that is close by your walls. There have been cases when cars have knocked units right out of the house.



There are a few special units designed to solve unusual problems. Narrow casement units can now usually be installed without permanently altering the window's frame.

If you need supplemental winter heating in the room you plan to summer cool, you might consider a room-size heat-pump. These units look and work like ordinary room air conditioners but, in addition, can produce a certain amount of heat. They cost more than regular cooling units.

Although most room units are installed in windows, there are now special sleeves for through-the-wall installation, which will not cut off window light or interfere with drapery hanging. An ordinary carpenter can install such a sleeve under or over a window, or even in a blank wall. One company makes a series of true air conditioners that need not be placed in a wall or window and can even cool a completely inside room. Excess heat from these units is carried down the drain by tap water flowing to and from the unit through flexible hoses. A reliable air-conditioning dealer can help you solve any of these special situations.

Here are some menus and recipes to start you thinking of breakfast as the best meal of the day.

Orange and Grapefruit Compote*
Toasted Bacon and Tomato Sandwich
Coffee or Tea

Orange and Grapefruit Compote

2 grapefruit
3 oranges
½ cup honey
Dash salt
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind

Cut peel from grapefruit and oranges with a sharp knife, removing all white membrane. Cut fruit in sections and discard seeds. Work over a bowl to catch all the juices.

Mix the fruit juice (you'll have about ½ cup) with honey, salt, grated lemon rind, and cook to a boil. Continue cooking 5 minutes longer. Remove from heat, and pour over fruit sections. Chill. Serves 4 to 6.

Menu
California Salad*
Cold Boiled Ham Slices
Toasted Crackers
Coffee or Tea

California Salad

Arrange several slices of red ripe tomatoes on a breakfast plate, along with wedges of ripe avocados, sliced oranges, and/or a peeled peach half. Garnish with crisp greens. The most refreshing dressing for this morning salad is a squeeze or so of lime or lemon juice.

Menu
Poached Fresh Plums*
Grilled Cheese Sandwich
Coffee or Tea

Poached Fresh Plums

1 lb. Italian prune plums
1 cup sugar
1 cup water
1 teaspoon vanilla extract or 1 inch vanilla bean
Dash cinnamon

Wash the plums, cut them in half and remove the pits. Don't peel. Cook sugar, water, vanilla extract or bean, and cinnamon together for 5 minutes. Add plums, and cook over a very low heat until just tender. This takes only a few minute. Remove from heat and chill. Serves 4.

Menu
Vegetable Juice Cocktail
Finnan Haddie Broiled in Milk*
Boiled New Potatoes
Coffee or Tea

Finnan Haddie Broiled in Milk

Start your oven at broil. Put finnan haddie fillets in a shallow pan and generously dot with butter. Pour enough warm milk over the fish to cover the bottom of the pan. Broil long enough to lightly brown the surface and heat the fish through. Remove from oven, drain, and serve with little boiled potatoes dressed with parsley butter.

Menu
Bowl of Fresh Cherries
Beef Patties with Rosemary Sauce*
Crisp Celery French Bread
Coffee or Tea

Beef Patties with Rosemary Sauce

Ground chuck or top round of beef, lean
3 tablespoons cognac
3 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
½ tablespoon prepared mustard
¾ teaspoon rosemary

Shape ground beef into thick patties (1 lb. beef makes 3 generous patties). Handle the meat gently, don't force or press it into shape. Set aside for a moment. Put cognac, Worcestershire sauce, mustard, rosemary in a blender and blend. If you haven't a blender, mix the ingredients thoroughly in a bowl. Now melt a little butter in a skillet. When skillet and butter are hot, put in the beef patties. Fry over a brisk heat until nicely browned on one side. Turn and brown the other side. Cooked this way, patties are pink in the center. Before serving pour some of the sauce over the meat and cook a minute or so longer. The leftover sauce keeps perfectly in your refrigerator. It is excellent with beef steaks or roasts.

Menu
Jellied Madrilene with Fresh Lime
Cream Cheese-Ginger Marmalade-Crackers*
Coffee or Tea

Cream Cheese-Ginger Marmalade-Crackers

This couldn't be easier to prepare. On breakfast plates arrange a portion of cream cheese (the new whipped kind in the market is delicious here), a generous serving of ginger marmalade, and plenty of crisp crackers. Just spread some of the cheese on a cracker, and cover with marmalade. The combination of flavor and texture is simply delicious.

Menu
Piquant Tomatoes*
Sautéed Canadian Bacon
Coconut Toast*
Coffee or Tea

Piquant Tomatoes

Dump a can (16 oz.) of tomatoes into a bowl. Stir in 2 tablespoons tart French dressing, a dash of sugar, ½ teaspoon salt. Chill in refrigerator. Serve cold to 4.

Coconut Toast

Spread 8 slices of bread on both sides with this mixture: Mix 6 tablespoons confectioners' sugar, few drops vanilla, 1 tablespoon water together to make a thin icing. Broil one side, turn and sprinkle with coconut. Broil until coconut is golden. Serve hot to 4.

Menu
Bowl of Plum Tomatoes
Broiled Bananas with Bacon*
Sesame Seed Crackers
Coffee or Tea

Broiled Bananas with Bacon

Remove skins from 4 bananas, then cut each banana in half lengthwise, and put in a shallow baking dish. Mix 2 tablespoons melted butter with ⅓ cup sugar, and 3 tablespoons lemon juice. Pour over bananas and bake in a 325° F. or slow oven for 15 to 20 minutes. Baste frequently with the liquid. Serve hot with lots of crisp bacon.

Sunday Morning Menu
Slices of Melon
Flank Steak Solera*
Heated Potato Chips
Buttered Toast
Strawberry Preserves
Coffee or Tea

Flank Steak Solera

1 flank steak, about 2 lb.
½ cup butter
¼ cup sherry

Preheat the broiler. Score surface of the steak diagonally with a sharp knife. Melt butter and mix with sherry. Brush one side of the beef with the mixture and broil 5 to 7 minutes. Turn, brush the second side, and broil the same length of time. Carve meat in thin, bias slices and serve with any remaining sauce. Serves 4.

ARE YOU GIVING YOUR CHILDREN A BALANCED CULTURAL DIET?

seven-to-ten range with a variety of suitable theatrical offerings. To this end they've commissioned ballets, plays, films, and puppet shows of the highest professional caliber.

Besides their two-day stand at the University, they "tour" the suburban communities of Long Beach and San Fernando bringing original productions to the Brownie and Cub Scout audiences. "So that," as one of the mother-directors explained, "by the time the children are twelve or thirteen, they are experienced theater-goers and know what to expect of more advanced productions. There is also the long-range goal of rearing more husbands who are theater-lovers," she added with a smile.

SEATTLE, too, has junior programs. In New York there are so many children's "Goings On About Town" that every week the New Yorker magazine lists them under a special section. Among the established ones are the New York Philharmonic's Concerts for Youth and The Little Orchestra Society series by Thomas Scherman.

In other cities such non-profit organizations as Youth Audiences, Inc., and the Guild Opera Co., are devoted solely to student patronage. They gear their repertoire to the various Board of Education music programs so that the children will get the maximum benefit from the performances. Whatever music is being studied in grades four through twelve culminates in Saturday morning performances by first-rate professional players.

Similarly, museum groups throughout the country are setting out to attract youngsters early. They schedule special exhibits and gallery tours for young members. The Walker Gallery in Minneapolis, Dallas Fine Arts Museum, and Los Angeles County Museum, to name a few, have regular Saturday morning sessions at which one of the museum staff talks about some phase of art. The young visitors are encouraged to sketch and ask questions. The atmosphere is informal, uninhibited, and quite unlike the museum trips of my youth.

But the Brooklyn Museum is perhaps the most complete in this respect, with its permanent Junior Museum. In this unique department the children are actually permitted to handle the displays and to talk with exhibiting artists.

Park and recreation departments also do their best to contribute to a child's mental growth and sensitivity. In some city parks the arts and crafts program consists of little more than lanyard-braiding and threading crepe-paper leis, but in the California foothill town of Arcadia they have a model park and recreation program for children. Starting in the spring, nature classes are offered to the six-through-ten age group, with flower-arranging for the junior high girls.

At other times during the year astronomy (using California Institute of Technology's Mt. Wilson observatory), bird watching (in the county arboretum), folk dancing, puppeteering, and dramatics are made available, ending up with a very ambitious Christmas show.

The Christmas play I saw one year was just delightful. It was largely written, staged, and performed by the "park" children. It was based on the historical origins of Arcadia, and the youngsters had managed to include many of the Mexican songs and dances learned during the year. All of the enrolled children played some part. It was a production the county agency and all the amateurs could be extremely proud of.

And last, public libraries and librarians are continually experimenting with new ways to arouse a card holder's intellectual curiosity and the general reading level. Story-telling time for the preschoolers is a common practice. Attractive poster displays or unusual exhibits in conjunction with outstanding books, teen-age reading sections, and "good books you might have overlooked" shelves are just a few of the ways librarians stimulate reader interest.

IN THE cultural smorgasbord mentioned, the cost of participation is low to the point of being negligible. The areas of interest are as varied as the children who enjoy them. Most of them are in continual operation so there is no beginning or middle or end to this pursuit of knowledge. But there is one important feature. Generally speaking, the cultural programs are handled by volunteers and a few public-spirited employees who don't advertise and can't come knocking at your door. It is left to the parents to learn of these opportunities and to bring them and the children together.

By going to a small extra effort to nourish your children's minds, the great experience of living will mean more to them—and to you.

petulant tears, unaware that the people at the next table were a group of beagle-eyed Russians contentedly savoring this further evidence of Western crack-up.

Lord knows, it's not always easy to keep your wits and your temper, but the veterans do, accepting the inevitable with at least external grace. We'd like to raise a small voice in defense of our traveling countrymen whose reputation for brashness and breeziness appears to be legendary. From our observation, Americans have no corner on rudeness. There are proportionately as many "ugly" Englishmen, Frenchmen, Italians, Danes, Brazilians, you name the whole human race, which appears to be traveling en masse these days.

In general, Europeans are a good deal more demanding than Americans whenever the question of money raises its head, and a whole lot fussier in matters of personal service, probably because they're used to getting more of it at home than we are. And they can be plenty haughty, even contemptuous, in letting their displeasure be known.

Where the American comes a cropper is in his almost temperamental restlessness, his driving urge to get the show on the road. His great blind spot as a traveler is a failure to understand that by far the greater part of the world moves slowly, spends more time on amenities, how-do-you-dos, tea and coffee drinking, approaches the business of the moment obliquely. What isn't accomplished today can be done tomorrow. To an American this is an incomprehensible state of affairs and, characteristically, he tries to change the unchangeable, at considerable cost to his own patience and blood pressure. We would be happier travelers and more wholeheartedly received if we could learn to adapt our pace to the tempo of our hosts.

It is cliché, but true, that you "get more" out of a country if you make an effort to speak the language. (English seems to be indeed a universal language these days, but, just when you're depending on this, you find that it isn't universal everywhere.)

So far as the Western languages are concerned, we are a devotee of the Berlitz books and even if, as ours does, your Italian comes out with a Swedish accent, to master a few words and phrases gives you some feeling of identity with the people you're visiting. (The latest in "instant" languages is a chart-form, pocket-size set of phrases, in French, German, Spanish, and Italian, published by Criterion Books, at $2.95. It will not equip you to read Molière or Goethe in the original, but it may save the day when you need a towel or a teaspoon.)

Almost any sentient human being is bound to pick up a word or two just from hearing it spoken. Some of our countrymen are especially good at this. The trouble is that they tend to think all foreign words are hilariously funny and incorporate them into their conversations with the natives as if they were big jokes, an opinion we suspect isn't shared by the natives themselves.

But in defense of the "loud-mouthed" American tourist, in our opinion most of the noisiness is an effort at communication. It may be illogical, but it's very human to think that by raising your voice you can make yourself understood.

Wisdom

Nothing impels you to raise your voice quite so urgently as the sight of your luggage with its handle hanging off or a rip in its side. Porters have been battering baggage since the days of Marco Polo, and the prevention and cure of this has always been a major headache to transportation companies. We used to think it was old-maidish to scrutinize the luggage with an eagle eye the minute it arrived off the boat, train, or plane—but it's only wisdom. The procedure is to point out any damage on the scene to the representative of the transportation company. Sometimes claims can be settled at once, or the luggage can be repaired immediately. In any case, it's on the record, the damage witnessed. Some companies, with understandable suspicion, are reluctant to honor claims made later.

Not one piece of "stock" material was used. All glazing, lumber, door and window frames were cut specifically to fit the plan. This accounts in large part for the sense of unstereotyped "difference," which even the architecturally uninitiated feel in visiting this house. For the dimensions we're used to seeing in ready-built houses are more or less determined by available stock-cut materials.

Mr. Borgatta says he did only what seemed sensible to save money. But in analyzing what he did, it turns out that there was hardly any part of the building operation to which he did not actively lend his brawn and brain. A few examples of his personal efforts: He cleared all his own land, performed a monumental feat in doing his own wood finishing, tarpapered the asphalt shingle roof, laid the floor tile, and did all the interior finishing. Mrs. Borgatta worked along with him on the interior work.

For the major structure he hired an independent carpenter and mason, with the understanding that he could work as a helper on the job. He subcontracted the wiring and plumbing. He credits much of the extraordinary workmanship in the house to some fortuitous facts that he could not have foreseen. The carpenter was a former sculptor, a stickler for detail, with a cabinetmaker's reverence for wood; the mason had always wanted to be an architect; the plumber was a man who made sculpture his hobby. They, therefore, caught on to the kind of beauty Mr. Borgatta and the architect were trying to create and gave the job their hearts as well as their hands.

Another extraordinary facet of the Borgatta story is that the house was partially bought by the owner's professional work as an artist as well as by his hammer and shovel labor. Both the architect and the contractor accepted paintings in part payment for services rendered. Lighting fixtures were obtained through a similar—and fortunate—arrangement.

These pleasant developments were as non-conformist as Mr. Borgatta's own behavior in embarking on the project. They seem especially noteworthy to us because there is a humanity implicit here, which lots of us had come to believe could no longer occur in modern business relations. One can only assume that one man's courageous faith in his own convictions inspired a chain reaction in those he dealt with. Mr. Borgatta, a man with the healthy viewpoint that people are preponderantly good, says he approached his building venture anticipating understanding and fair treatment and, by and large, he got it.

This is not to say that it was all skittles and beer, by any means. The Borgattas found themselves on the rack of time, as all do-it-yourselfers do, and especially those who are doing their own work in their spare hours.

When they presented their plans to the local board of architectural review, their time schedule and their high hopes hit a slough of despond. The board took exception to the façade of the house on the grounds that its unfamiliar appearance did not sufficiently conform to the more traditional architecture of the neighborhood. The Borgattas agreed to consider possible substitutions of material, and did. But when the building was up they could see that nothing but the originally planned ceramic tile would give them the quality they wanted the house to have. This involved them in two appeals to the board, which were denied, and a final appeal to the village zoning board, which was eventually accepted but only after the Borgattas had gone through the red tape of obtaining the consent of all neighbors within a 200-yard distance of their plot's perimeter. It was a matter that hung fire for six months, eating up their time with paper work and legalities and general frustration. But Mr. Borgatta says he felt he had to fight for the right to have his house as he wanted it. As a matter of principle, he was willing to cooperate with any existing regulations but only as long as they made sense and did not infringe on his freedom.

Probably the nadir was reached when the Borgattas moved into their house, about nine months after ground had been broken. It was just about decently enclosed. This is a dreary procedure almost all self-builders are forced to follow, for few people can support two establishments simultaneously and mortgage interest starts accruing even as a house is going up. Moreover, you have to be on the job to finish it. But all will admit that this is cheerless living, surrounded by unfinished disorder, grit, sawdust, and innumerable reminders of all the work that is still ahead.

It is a particular trial when there are young children to be housed, fed, and tended as normally as possible. Mrs. Borgatta admits that between such chores as installing tile, sculpturing outlets in the woodwork, and interminably cleaning up, she had moments when she wondered what had possessed them to get into this. This depression seems to be a necessary phase of the game, like the fever in an illness, which, when it's over, leaves the patient recovered. She confesses that it took her almost a year before she recovered, but then it was to realize that few satisfactions can compare with the joy of living in a house that is exactly as you've wanted it.

If building your own house is the ultimate in do-it-yourself, it is also the ultimate in that pride in creation which comes to all people who have fashioned something with their own hands. Mr. Borgatta's reaction to his house-building experience is probably best reflected in his plans to start building his own two-car garage with workshop facilities.

CONSTRUCTION DETAILS

The lower-level walls of the Borgatta house are concrete block, covered with white stucco inside and out, resting on poured concrete footings. The lower-level floor is a steel-mesh reinforced concrete slab, with membrane waterproofing, resting on a 2" layer of macadam on a 4" gravel base. The upper level is framed with vertical 3" x 8" fir posts, exposed inside and out. Recessed wall areas between the posts are covered on the exterior with stucco or ceramic tile and on the interior with gypsum board painted or covered with linen. Exposed sills and fascia are Southern cypress.

Interior ceilings are painted gypsum board. All window frames and trim were custom-milled from California redwood. Southern cypress, or Douglas fir. Glazing is polished plate glass. The fireplace and chimney are brick; the hearth, travertine marble. Doors and movable sash have aluminum weather stripping. Flashing, gutters and downspouts are copper. Wood-framed roof is plywood sheathed and covered with off-white asphalt shingles. Water piping is copper; soil pipe, cast iron.

PRODUCT INFORMATION

Following is a list of the specific products used in the house designed by Architect Stanley M. Torkelsen for Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Borgatta in Dobbs Ferry, New York. The building materials, equipment, furnishings, and accessories may usually be purchased from lumber dealers, specialty contractors, department stores, or accessory shops. Retail stores and addresses are indicated only for items not available nationally through the normal distribution channels.

The contrast of texture above is apparent from as far away as the plants can be seen, but up close each plant proves to be interesting in itself. Artemisia has a finely-cut fernlike gray leaf and the New Zealand flax has interesting stripes.

Notice how the small fine plant in the foreground relates to the trees on the distant hillside. It also serves to accent the grayness and long-lobed leaf of the dusty miller. Landscape architect, Garrett Eckbo. The garden of Robert E. Pelissier.

How to exploit the textural beauty of plants

Look for opportunities to contrast the differences in size, shape, or color of foliage so that plants will set off each other

● Beauty of texture can be a delight wherever it occurs, but even more so where you plan for it. The easiest effects are with big differences in foliage. But look, too, for small, subtle changes. You need big contrasts where plantings are seen from a distance. Use smaller gradations where you see plants at close range. If the contrast between plants seems too great to "read" as a unit, you can bridge the gap with a texture that falls between the two in size, shape, or surface. Don't use too many components: The effect may become too busy. Consider color, too. Color contrast increases textural contrast, similar colors reduce apparent contrast.

Gardens for better living

Any one of these plants would be a standout by itself, but seen together they are even more so. Contrasts of color also help further the visual impact of the planting. The Fatsia japonica in the upper left is a deep green of rather soft texture. Fatshedera Lizei, upper right, is a glossy medium green of related shape. The big contrast is the echeveria with its symmetrical rosettes of pale gray-green leaves. A dramatic planting like this could make any small space count for a lot.

PHOTOGRAPH BY ERNEST BRAUN

The very unexpectedness of this unlikely combination adds to the enjoyment of it. The round leaves are those of a low-growing geranium. It has merged with two plants of Festuca glauca, sprightly little clumps of blue-gray grasslike foliage. To enjoy such small details as this is the reward of developing an eye for textural beauty. Detail from a garden by Landscape Architect Katherine Imlay Stedman.

PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER

WATER LILIES ARE EASIER THAN YOU MAY THINK

It also relieves you of the tedious bailing job when you empty the pool for cleaning (required once a year), for it unscrews easily to drain into a dry well, ditch, or storm sewer. Pools can be siphoned out with a garden hose, but only if there is a lower level onto which to drain the water.

There are two kinds of water lilies: hardy and tropical. The hardy ones are more adaptable, are a bit easier to grow, and require less water surface. The tropicals offer the choice of night or daytime bloom. They are larger and showier in leaf and flower, are more fragrant, and come in a wider choice of colors. In a mild climate, the season of bloom can be extended by using both kinds, as you will see.

The hardy lilies

The hardy lilies are all perennial plants. If you give the roots proper care, they will bloom each season for many years. They do best where winters are cold enough to force them into dormancy. In frost-free climates, where they get no winter rest, the hardy water lilies won't do well. They also need rather warm nights to promote flowering. For this reason they are less successful in the coastal climate of Oregon, Washington, or Northern California.

All the hardy lilies are day-bloomers. The flowers range from 2 or 3 inches in diameter up to 6 or 18 inches, depending on variety. This is somewhat smaller, in general, than the tropical kinds. They must have at least four hours of sun a day and will bloom even better with more. A mature flower begins to open about ten o'clock in the morning and is fully open in an hour. It closes in late afternoon. A flower will usually repeat this performance for three days before it fades. Established plants will often have three or four flowers in bloom at a time. They start in May, which is before the tropicals start, and new flowers keep coming until frost.

The hardy lilies come in all colors except blue, although yellows are few. Some are fragrant and are so marked in the catalogs. Some of them, called changeables, have buds of one color which change colors as they open. Most of the hardies bloom right at water level, but a few stand above the surface on short stems.

How to grow the hardy kind

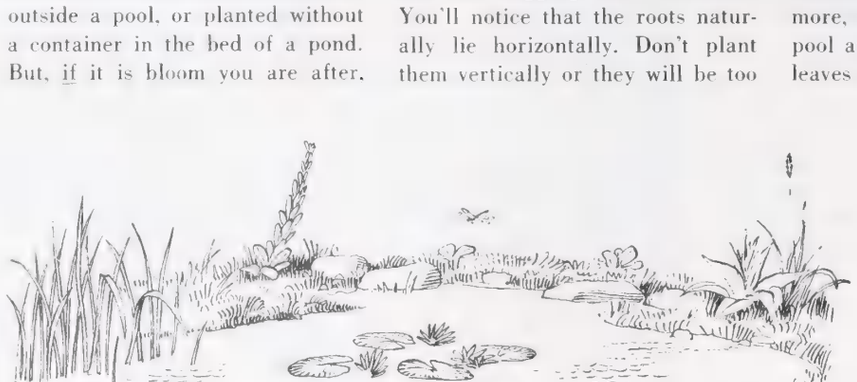
Water lilies do best in containers of soil set in the pool. They will also grow in water-filled containers outside a pool, or planted without a container in the bed of a pond. But, if it is bloom you are after, you'll get more and better flowers when you give them the rich soil and even temperature that only container-growing in a pool can assure.

Use a box at least 12 to 18 inches square and 10 inches deep for each plant. Fill this to within an inch of the top with three parts good soil (preferably on the clay side) mixed with one part rotted cow manure. If this precious commodity is hard to come by in your neighborhood, use dried manure at the rate of one part to eight or ten parts soil. Or, use a double handful of commercial fertilizer (5-10-5) mixed into the box of soil.

Before planting, set the box of prepared soil into the filled pool so the top is about 6 inches below the water surface. Use bricks to bring the box to the right level. Fill the pool well in advance so the water will be balanced with the air temperature.



When you get the roots, they will be either in growth or will have an obvious growing point or tip on them. If it is a growing root, press it into the wet soil until the junction of stem and root is level with the top of the soil. If there is only a growing point, press the root down until about one inch of the tip with the growing point is above the soil. (When you plant in containers under water, the soil is so soft no digging is necessary.) You'll notice that the roots naturally lie horizontally. Don't plant them vertically or they will be too deep. After planting roots, cove the root to hold it in place, cove the soil with about half an inch sand or fine gravel to keep th water and the fish from disturbin the soil and clouding the poo This will leave about a half-inc edge of the box around the sand hold it in place. The growing ti should be just above the san Handle the roots gently and l careful of the growth point. If is damaged, the plant may di Lotus is especially vulnerable.

You can grow water lilies if you can provide any of these conditions

In a pond the roots are simply buried in the mud at the bottom. Hardy lilies grown this way are the easiest of all to care for and will bloom for many seasons.

In a garden pool the roots are set in boxes of enriched soil. In freezing weather the bricks are removed and the boxes set on the bottom below the ice.

On a terrace you can grow water lilies in a water-tight container. Lily catalogs include containers as well as the small plants best adapted to growing in small space.

hey need more pool space than the hardy type. For best results, allow 25 square feet of water surface for each plant. And, to nourish the top growth, they should have more soil for the roots. Use boxes 18 to 25 inches square and 10 inches deep. The tropicals need a little more sun too, at least 5 or 6 hours a day.

The tropicals usually come with a ball of earth around the roots and are planted in May in the South and June in the North. Some can be planted as late as July.

The day-blooming tropicals are like the hardy type. They open in the morning and close in late afternoon. Most of these are fragrant.

The night-blooming kinds open at six or seven in the evening and close about eleven in the morning. These are especially satisfying for gardeners who work away from home. They are open to be enjoyed when you leave for work and again at night about the time you come home. In dull weather some of the night-bloomers may not close at all, which puts a pleasant face on a dreary day.

Each flower of a tropical will open or close for five or six days, and there may be three or four of them in bloom on each plant. Although the tropicals bloom only for a year, they perform brilliantly.

Plant the root ball in the boxes set 4 to 6 inches under water. Be particularly careful not to touch the growing point and make sure it is not covered by the layer of sand that holds the soil in place. As growth develops, lower the box until there's about 8 inches of water above the soil. The tropicals grow better in shallower water than the hardies.

The miniature lilies

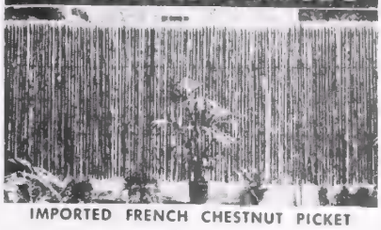
If you'd like to try water lilies without a permanent pool, there are some small varieties that can be grown in a water-filled tub as small as 18 inches across and 10 or 12 inches deep. These can go on a terrace or deck and offer an easy way to sample the joys of water gardening without committing yourself to a long-range program.



The small lilies will grow in 4 inches of soil. Plant after putting in the soil and filling the tub with water. Fish and scavengers should be added too.

The lotus

This is quite a different flower from the water lily, but it is a dramatic beauty, and if you are going to prepare for water gardening, this is one you should consider. The plant holds its great leaves

WATER LILIES ARE EASIER THAN YOU MAY THINK

2 to 3 feet above the water like graceful inverted parasols. The beautifully sculptured bud on a long, separate stem opens to a large flower more informal in character than the perfectly symmetrical water lily.

You'll find that all water-lily growers offer lotus too, and it can be similarly grown in containers set in the pool. But the lotus can also be grown in a watertight tub of soil at least 18 to 24 inches across and 12 to 16 inches deep. The larger the container the better the plant will flourish.

Mix fertilizer and soil and fill container to within seven or eight inches of the top. Add a layer of sand after planting (be careful of that growing point) and fill to within an inch of the rim with water. The soil must be kept covered with water at all times. A couple of goldfish will remind you that water is required here, and they will keep mosquitoes from growing in the water as well as add the sparkle of moving color.

Ice will kill a lotus root too. Set them on the bottom of a pool below the ice line for the winter or bring tub and all inside and store it at 35 to 40 degrees, protecting the roots from mice. Every other year the root should be lifted and a new section of the root-stalk replanted in a fresh mixture of soil and fertilizer.

General care

Water lilies or lotus will respond handsomely with larger foliage and flowers if they are fertilized three or four times during the growing season. While any balanced fertilizer will do, all growers have a plant food prepared especially for water lilies. To feed, put the fertilizer (follow instructions for amount) in a paper bag or cheesecloth container and push it gently under the soil near the roots. Cover with soil and replace the sand topping. The container will soon disintegrate and release the food to the roots.

As the foliage and flowers fade and die, it is a good idea to cut the stems near the root and remove them. Dead plants can foul the water, which is especially critical if there are fish in the pool.

A word about livestock

A few goldfish and some snai are well worth while in any poo The fish pay their way by eatin mosquito larvae, and snails he keep the bottom of the pool clea

The number of fish you can p in a pool is directly related to th water surface. The formula f ordinary goldfish is one inch fish (figure the adult size) f every 20 square inches of wat surface. A 5-inch fish, for examp needs 100 square inches of wat area—a space 10 by 10 inche The fish can winter under the i wherever the water lilies can. Bo will survive if the ice doesn't rea them. The two important preca tions for keeping goldfish are n to overfeed them and not to ove crowd them. Follow instructions the food packets carefully.

Snails are excellent all-arou underwater janitors. Figure abo two of them per square foot water surface. This may seem li a lot, but fewer than this can't expected to do the job.

There are water-lily growers all parts of the country. Here a representative list of those fro whom you can get catalogs:

Beldt's Water Gardens, Hazelwoo Missouri.

Glendale Flower and Water Ga dens, 1260 Justin Ave., Glenda California.

S. Scherer & Sons, Waterside Av Northport, L.I., N.Y.

If you'd like more informati on water lilies, there's an autho tative book called Garden Poo Water Lilies, and Goldfish, by G. Thomas, Jr. (D. Van Nostran $5.98), which gives a wealth material on the subjects in t title. It will be particularly helpf to anyone building a pool. All ste from planning the pool to curi the concrete (a very importa point) are thoroughly covered.

CONSTRUCTION DETAILS

The lower walls of the Larson ouse are made of block (with oncrete brick facing) resting on oured concrete footings or foun- ations. Reinforced concrete slabs n the lower levels rest on a 3″ nsulating concrete slab over a ravel drainage base. Above the nasonry, except for major steel irders, wood framing is used. Glazing is polished plate and ouble-strength crystal glass. The x 6 fir roof decking, supported y glue-laminated beams, is cov- red with insulating board, two lay- rs of asphalt felt, and red cedar hingles. Accentuated shadow lines n the roof are created by double- oursing specific rows of the shin- les. Where siding is used, it is apped 1 x 10 stained redwood fas- ened with aluminum nails to pre- ent rust streaks.

Painted plaster is used on the ower-level ceilings and on some f the interior walls. Other walls re stained or sealed mahogany or edwood boards, mahogany ply- ood, or exposed brick. Laundry alls are perforated hardboard; in he lavatory and bath they are eramic tile and wood. Upper level eiling beams are stained dark, nd the underside of the fir deck- ng is stained gray. The chimney s made of the same concrete brick sed for the lower walls. All win- ows and inside and outside trim re custom-milled redwood or ma- ogany. Doors and windows have ronze weather stripping. Floors n entry, kitchen, lavatory, master ath, living room, and lower stairs re terrazzo. There is vinyl on con- rete in family room, vinyl on ply- ood in study and second bed- oom, and carpet on plywood in he master bedroom and upper tairs. Water lines are galvanized r copper, and drains and vents re cast iron.

A land of "Strangeness and Charm"

Written more than fifty years ago, these excerpts from the work of Lafcadio Hearn are as penetrating today as ever, proving the unchanging character of the Japanese people

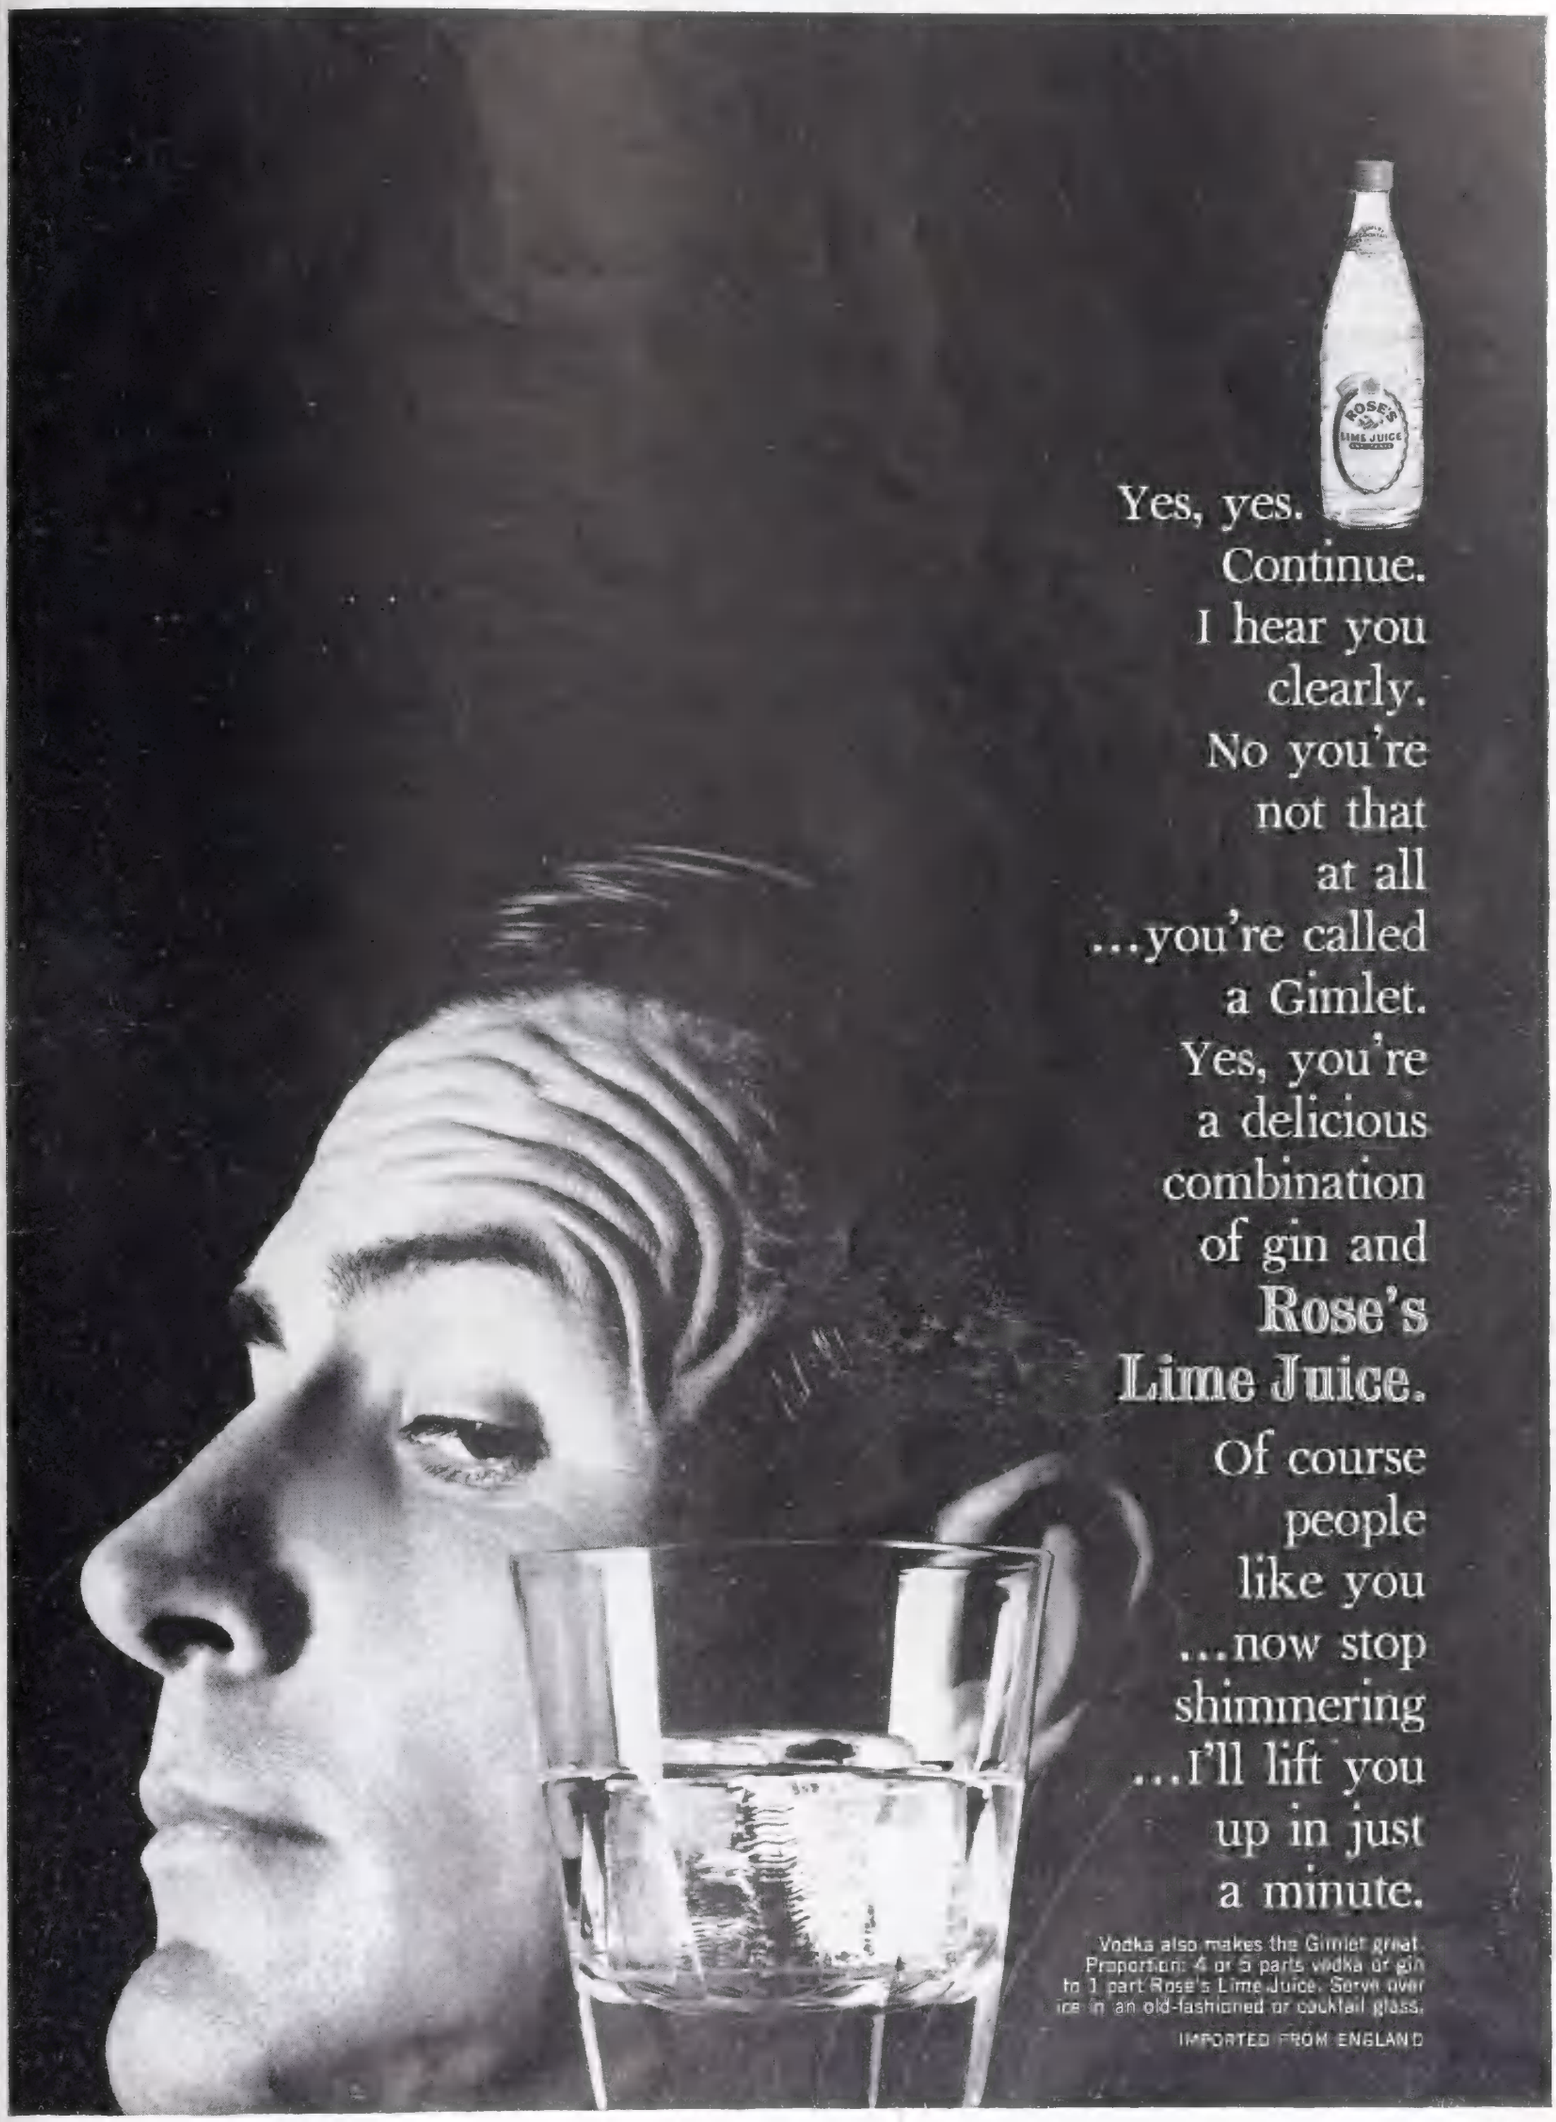
• "Some of us, at least, have often wished that it were possible to live for a season in the beautiful vanished world of Greek culture . . . And yet, to witness the revival of some perished Greek civilization . . . were not any more of a privilege than is the opportunity actually afforded us to study Japanese life. . . . Japan offers us the living spectacle of conditions older, and psychologically much farther away from us, than those of any Greek period with which art and literature have made us closely acquainted.

"As first perceived, the outward strangeness of things in Japan produces (in certain minds, at least) a queer thrill impossible to describe. . . . You find yourself moving through queer small streets full of odd small people, wearing robes and sandals of extraordinary shapes. . . . The houses are constructed and furnished in ways alien to all your experience; and you are astonished to find that you cannot conceive the use or meaning of numberless things on display in the shops. Food-stuffs of unimaginable derivation; utensils of enigmatic forms; emblems incomprehensible of some mysterious belief; strange masks and toys that commemorate legends of gods or demons; odd figures, too, of the gods themselves, with monstrous ears and smiling faces.

"All these you may perceive as you wander about; though you must also notice telegraph-poles and typewriters, electric lamps and sewing machines. . . .

"East and West the fundamental parts of human nature—the emotional bases of it—are much the same: the mental difference between a Japanese and a European child is mainly potential. But with growth the difference rapidly develops and widens, till it becomes, in adult life, inexpressible.

"But as the outward strangeness of Japan proves to be full of beauty so the inward strangeness appears to have its charm—an ethical charm reflected in the common life of the people. . . . Everybody greets everybody with happy looks and pleasant words; faces are always smiling; the commonest incidents of everyday life are transfigured by a courtesy at once so artless and so faultless that it appears to spring directly from the heart, without any teaching. . . .



"Religion brings no gloom into this sunshine; before the Buddhas and the gods folk smile as they pray; the temple-courts are playgrounds for the children. . . . Family existence would seem to be everywhere characterized by gentleness; there is no visible quarreling, no loud harshness, no tears and reproaches. Cruelty, even to animals, appears to be unknown.

"The simplicity that delights you is no simplicity of barbarism. Here everyone has been taught; everyone knows how to write and speak beautifully, how to compose poetry, how to behave politely; there is everywhere cleanliness and good taste; interiors are bright and pure; the daily use of the hot bath is universal. How refuse to be charmed by a civilization in which every relation appears to be governed by altruism, every action directed by duty, and every object shaped by art? . . .

"Japanese civilization is peculiar since it offers us the spectacle of many successive layers of alien culture superimposed above the simple indigenous basis, and forming a very bewilderment of complexity. . . .

"The wonder of Japan is not to be sought in the countless borrowings with which she has clothed herself. . . . No, the real wonder is the Wearer. For the interest of the costume is much less in its beauty of form and tint than in its significance as idea—as representing something of the mind that devised or adopted it. . . .

"Long ago the best and dearest Japanese friend I ever had said: 'When you find, in four or five years more, that you cannot understand the Japanese at all, then you will begin to know something about them.'"

U.S. KOYLON FOAM

THE WORLD'S MOST MODERN MATTRESS

Compared with foam, the usual mattress feels like assorted hardware. And U. S. Koylon is more than just foam. It's the finest foam... made with thousands of small cores on BOTH sides. NOT just a skimpy few on one side, like some mattresses. The result is a specially sensitive, solid foam that conforms like water to every curve, yet firmly supports the entire body. And remember! Only a mattress like Koylon with its thousands of cores can be so airy, insuring cleaner, cooler, fresher sleep, far better wear. Koylon is also odorless, non-allergenic; reversible, of course. So be fussy about the foam you buy. Much on the market is more fluff than foam. Be sure to say U. S. Koylon, the Platinum Label in foam. Twin-size U. S. The tea house is a uniquely Japanese architectural form called sukiya. It is designed as a quiet background for the highly ritualized tea ceremony.

What is the tea ceremony?

The tea ceremony, the most shibui of all customs, is a peculiarly Japanese ritual, which has been part of the culture for more than 500 years. It is a rigidly formalized aesthetic performance, with the motions and demeanor of host and guests as prescribed and stylized as the movements of a ballet. It is a deliberately planned "quiet time" during which guests and host free their minds of other concerns and give their whole attention to the flavor of the tea, the beauty of their surroundings and the utensils. It is an exercise in awareness, a sharpening of the senses to discover depths of beauty which may not be apparent on the surface of things.

This contemplative, tranquil ritual is the essence of Japanese beauty, and only the most shibui objects are used in connection with it. The most significant aspect of it is that all Japanese are familiar with it. About two million people a year take instruction in the art of conducting and participating in the tea ceremony.

Besides learning a most elaborate code of etiquette, the student must master the quiet, controlled body movements prescribed for every phase of the ceremony, from the preliminary hand-washing ritual and the humbling, creeping entrance into the tea house via a tiny door, through the making, serving and drinking of the tea to the formal departure. A perfectly conducted ceremony is a silent symphony of graceful but restrained motion, both guests and host participating. It flows so naturally that no one would guess that this was the result of conscious discipline.

To have a fuller statement of the aesthetic implications of the tea ceremony, send $1.00 (includes airmailing) to the Honolulu Academy of Arts, Hawaii, for the booklet, "The Way of Tea" by Dr. Soetsu Yanagi.

The tea utensils are revered by Japanese as simple objects but with the greatest beauty, necessities that aesthetics have raised to a high level.

Home-wide Telephone Convenience

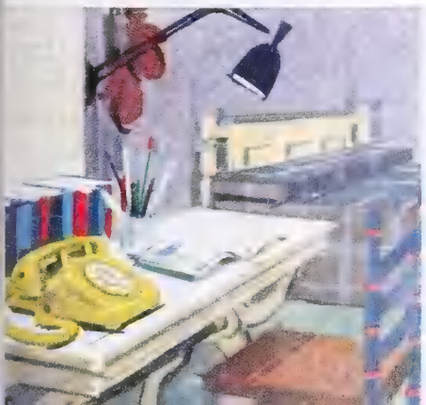
Your family probably uses the telephone a lot—most families do these days. So you can be sure they'll enjoy the comfort of handy extension phones.

Extensions where they're needed make living much easier and less demanding of everyone's time and energy.



A look around should tell you quickly where extension phones can serve your family best—in living areas, bedrooms, the kitchen, perhaps a den or workshop.

And a look at the phones themselves will tell you which colors will go where most attractively. To order, just call or visit your Bell Telephone business office. The cost is pleasantly low.

Listening to Japanese Music

You can hear a thousand years of development in a strange beauty of sound

• "Serene," "sad," "haunting"—these words describe hogaku, the music that is purely Japanese. Even at a first hearing, these qualities are apparent to Western ears. It is easy to hear why the Japanese describe the best of their music as "mauve" in tone.

The same standards of shibui—that special kind of beauty that includes the patina and tradition of age, incompleteness and irregularity of design, suggestiveness, and the calmness of spirit that comes from lack of artifice—apply to Japanese music as well as to their painting, poetry, and conduct.

The Japanese musician tries to find beauty in simplicity, but he will, at the same time, conceal or omit something so that you may discover it for yourself. The pace will be such that you have time to consider what you hear as you hear it.

Japanese music is small: no choral works, no symphonies. The bulk of the music is vocal, instrumental, and ensemble.

How is it shibui? A brief look (and listen) will show.

While we Westerners understand music by listening to the richness of chords and also by listening to the melodic line, looking "down" at a Japanese "chord" can be fatal. It sounds—and often is—chaotic. The music is not harmonic as we know the word. It is not built on chords. Rather it is linear in the same way the Gregorian chant is linear. In fact, if you listen to Japanese Zen music, you will "recognize" the same kind of liturgical chantings you hear in the Catholic Mass. Japanese music appears to sound like unaccompanied melody. Combinations, limited as they are, make for sad and naked sounds. The rhythmical frame and the purpose of the composition hold it together and move it along. Rhythm has a far more important role in Japanese music than in Western music.

The modern jazz fan will understand some important considerations of Japanese music: variation, elaboration, and the omission of important tones. The connoisseur listens for what is new about the familiar: the way it is played and the performer's style within the rigid limitations his instruments impose.

Listening to the musical line, you, too, will soon begin to recognize melodic patterns and motifs. Japanese music is "interior decoration" for the ear. It always goes along with something else—dance, poetry, or drama. Even drumming patterns are related to specific situations and may have meanings all their own, such as "mountain echoes." Composition in Japan, then, might seem to Westerners as simply a rearrangement of basic tunes. It is much more sophisticated than that.

Japanese music is built on several five-tone scales, roughly corresponding to our major and minor scales. But while Western music breaks the octave into twelve tones, the Japanese break the octave into perhaps twenty or thirty tones. One of the most important of the five-tone scales is familiar to our ears—it is used in our folk songs. Each of the two most used scales has three modes, or variations. But none of these six modes may start on just any note, only on a prescribed one or two. Ascending melodic lines may be in one mode and descending lines in another. The Japanese national anthem is composed this way. The modes themselves and their combinations explain the haunting effect of Japanese music.

Off with the oven! Thanks to Tupperware, you can make frosty-fresh, no-bake dishes like these way ahead of time — and they'll stay as fresh as they look! In fact, with Tupperware you can fix a weekendful of family favorites all at once. Say goodbye to the last-minute rush!

What makes it all possible? The exclusive, patented Tupperware Seal that locks out moisture-robbing air, seals in freshness and flavor. Airtight Tupperware is especially good for dishes like our "Sea-Breeze Salad." It seals in those all-important seasonings . . . gives them a chance to put their full flavor to work.

Tupperware's perfect for salad tossing, too! The seal fits so tightly, you can shake any dressing clear through a gardenful of greens — and nothing will spill or leak. Store Tupperware sideways to save shelf space, or turn it upside down to flip a mold!

And where do you buy these light and lovely plastic containers? At a party! A fun-to-go-to, fun-to-give Tupperware Home Party. Call your local Tupperware distributor for your nearest dealer's name. Look for Tupperware in the Yellow Pages under "Housewares" or "Plastics." Or write directly to Dept. B-8, Tupperware Home Parties Inc., Orlando, Florida.

PANIC WHEN YOU TALK?

A noted publisher in Chicago reports there is a simple technique of everyday conversation which can pay you real dividends in both social and business advancement and works like magic to give you added poise, self confidence and greater popularity.

According to this publisher many people do not realize how much they could influence others simply by what they say and how they say it. Whether in business, at social functions, or even in casual conversations with new acquaintances, there are ways in which you can make a good impression every time you talk.

To acquaint the readers of this book with the easy-to-follow rules for developing skill in everyday conversation, the publishers have printed full details of their interesting self-training method in a 24-page booklet, "Adventures in Conversation," which will be mailed free to anyone who requests it. No obligation. Simply send your request to: Conversation Studies, 835 Diversey Parkway, Dept. 211C, Chicago 14, Ill. A postcard will do.

BEACH TENT

Take along this colorful tent and enjoy shade and privacy when you want it. Modeled after tents the Crusaders used hundreds of years ago. Popular now at all the glamorous Mediterranean resorts. This imported design really tames ocean winds.

Roomy! Six-foot height means no crouching when you use it as a bath house. Brass snap-on clips hold front flap secure to give you complete privacy. Front flap raises to add 30 square feet of sun-shielded space for children to play, for a picnic or for two big lounge chairs. Tent is 5′ ■ 5′. Made of double-stitched heavy drill, vinyl-coated. Won't peel, blister or crack. Candy-striped in bright red or green on white. Comes in its own canvas bag no larger than a golf bag. Complete with 6, two-section wooden poles; sisal ropes and stout wooden stakes that really hold and won't cut ankles. Ideal to take on boat trips or beside a pool. ## For generations, the most distinguished initials have appeared on Wamsutta sheets

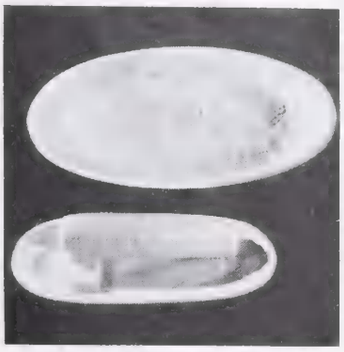
Like finest silver, Wamsutta sheets are accustomed to carrying important initials. A century back, many a grand lady embroidered them herself. More likely, yours are monogrammed. Though even without the monogram, you can be sure your sumptuous SUPERCALE® sheets make a truly personal statement about you.

Elegant trousseaus have always included Wamsutta sheets. (At a famous Eastern college, we're told, the girls start stashing them away in their freshman year). But you needn't be ceremonial about them. Sleeping Supercale-silky every night adds the nicest kind of fillip to everyday living.

Look for Blossom Tones (illustrated) and other SUPERCALE fashion sheets at wonderful reductions during August sales (from $4.45). And be sure to see DEBUCALE,® the Wamsutta luxury sheet priced for young home-makers. From $2.79 during August.



WAMSUTTA MILLS, 1430 Broadway, New York 18, N.Y.

Also look for WAMSUTTA Heritage Towels, Babycale® crib sheets, blankets, automatic blankets, mattress pads and covers, pillows, fashion fabrics for men, women and children.

IF SHE LOVES ROSES, wears jewelry with underplayed elegance, lives in classic fashions characteristic of her fine taste, send her these tiny 18k Italian gold earrings. They're set with little rubies, real ones, of course, and they just couldn't be lovelier. Clasp back or pierced ear styles are just ¾". $48 incl. tax from Merrin, HB8, 530 Madison Ave., New York 22.

FITTING AND PROPER and pretty, too, for serving steaming golden bantams are these white ceramic Italian imports. Individual servers hold 1 or 2 ears and butter pats; platter accommodates enough to satisfy the most confirmed corn hounds. Embossed raised corn design, 4 servers, 10½ x 4½", $5.50; 8, $9.95. Platter, 13½ x 8¾", $3.95. Seth & Jed, Dept. H8, New Marlborough, Mass.

CIVIL WAR POSTERS. Richly detailed replicas of Lincoln-years posters bring alive the Civil War era. Set of 4 includes the Lincoln-Johnson election of 1864, the bold reward seeking Booth, Surrat and Herold for Lincoln's murder, the Northern recruiting poster, and "Slaves for Sale." On 11" heavy stock, $1.95 the set. Greenland Studios, 3735B N.W. 67th St., Miami 47, Florida.

AN OLD SMOOTHIE. That's what your shabby pillow will be when you slip on these zippered satin protectors. They're completely washable, come in delicious shades of pink, blue, gold or white. Elegant cover-ups for old pillows, they're nice, too, for keeping new ticking trousseau-fresh. 21 x 28", $2.50 each: 21 x 36", $3 each. Scintilla, 1209 W. Balmoral, Chicago 30, Ill.

DAD SHOWS OFF and we know why because we gave him a set like this filled with family photos and he wears it proudly. ## LISTENING TO JAPANESE MUSIC

Like the ancient Greek modes, each Japanese mode may reflect a mood or situation. Even if the instruments were capable of transposition—which they are not—a love song, for example, can only be played in the in mode, at the in pitches. If it were put in a different key, it would no longer be a love song. Furthermore, instruments are "untempered" and so present true sounds and pure intonations.

Since some tones of the scale cannot be played by one instrument or another, it may be that only a full ensemble can complete the scales called for by a particular composition. This incompleteness of the instrument means that often important sounds are omitted—by necessity—because of the nature of the instrument.

"Such limitations are frustrating," you will say. Not to the Japanese. Omissions are carefully planned and are far more effective than statement would be, for what is not said is rich with implication.

A sense of confinement is inbred in the Japanese character by the geography and the masses of people crowding on the bits of arable land. As a result of this feeling, Japanese art, including music, moves within very narrow boundaries. Refinement rather than expansion is the goal of the Japanese musician. He tries to derive the maximum effect from the minimum material. Beauty comes from the skill with which the artist operates within the limits of tradition and instrument.

Think of Japanese music as chamber music, not symphony. Remember that it is oriented to literature to a far greater extent than Western music, that it is theatrical more often than not, that often the associated text is the key to understanding. Listen to what is left unsounded as well as what is, and "let it happen" to you. Soon you will hear shibusa in Japanese music.

Suggested Listening

The Japanese Koto. Shinichi Yuize. Cook 1132. Stamford, Connecticut.

Representative of classical and modern music on the "most Japanese" of instruments. Lyrical. A good introduction to Japanese music.

Masterpieces of Koto. Played by Michio Miyagi, Victor JL 7.

Nine modern compositions for the 13-stringed koto, by one of Japan's leading musicians.

Folk Music of Japan, Ethnic Folkways Library FE 4429.

Work songs, ballads children's songs, love songs, all delightful and interesting. The children's ball-bouncing song, sung by them, is worth the price of the record alone.

Traditional Folk Dances of Japan, Ethnic Folkway Library, FE 4356.

Dramatic primitive music, very gay with singing, stamping, clapping, bells, and whistles. Thrilling.

The Azuma Kabuki Musicians, Columbia Masterworks WL 5110.

Kabuki rests on centuries of tradition in the Japanese theatre. The ensemble music accompanies dancing and is lively and full of atmosphere.

Two Major Dramas: Noh, Caedmon TC 2019.

Sophisticated, drama-with-music dating to early 14th Century. Fascinating for the interested.

The Way of Eiheiji: Zen Buddhist Ceremony, Folkways Records FR 8980.

Reminds one of Gregorian chanting—although there is no relation. A good introduction to Zen philosophy and an interesting aspect of Japanese music.

Waka, by Michiko Toyama. Folkways Records, FW 8881.

Translations of "Haiku Nin Shu" poetry with accompaniment by a contemporary Japanese composer using modern electronic devices as well as classic instruments, plus a modern Noh opera.

History of Music in Sound, Vol. I., Ancient and Oriental Music. RCA Victor: Oxford University Press, LM 6057.

Representative music from many Oriental countries including Japan, showing similarities and dissimilarities. A "way in" to Japanese music.

Japan: Its Sounds and People. Capitol T 10230.

What are street noises and the sounds of daily life like in Japan? Here is an introduction to what you will hear when you visit the country.

Japan's crowning glory: her women

Lafcadio Hearn's description of the Japanese women, written in 1904, is just as applicable today

• "It has well been said that the most wonderful aesthetic products of Japan are not its ivories, nor its bronzes, nor its porcelains, nor its swords, nor any of its marvels in metal or lacquer—but its women.

"Accepting as partly true the statement that woman everywhere is what man has made her, we might say that this statement is more true of the Japanese woman than of any other. Of course it required thousands and thousands of years to make her. . . . Before this ethical creation, criticism should hold its breath; for there is here no single fault save the fault of a moral charm unsuited to any world of selfishness and struggle.

"It is the moral artist that now commands our praise, the realizer of an ideal beyond Occidental reach. How frequently has it been asserted that, as a moral being, the Japanese woman does not seem to belong to the same race as the Japanese man! Considering that heredity is limited by sex, there is reason in the assertion: The Japanese woman is an ethically different being from the Japanese ma

"Perhaps no such type of wom will appear again in this world f a hundred thousand years; the co ditions of industrial civilizati will not admit of her existence. T type could not have been creat in any society shaped on mode lines, nor in any society where t competitive struggle takes those u moral forms with which we ha become too familiar. Only a socie under extraordinary regulation a regimentation, a society in whi all self-assertion was repressed, self-sacrifice made a universal o ligation, a society in which pe sonality was clipped like a hedg permitted to bud and bloom fro within, never from without; short, only a society founded up ancestor-worship could have pr duced it.

"She has no more in comm with the humanity of this Twentie Century of ours—perhaps very mu less—than has the life depict upon old Greek vases. Its charm the charm of a vanished world— charm strange, alluring, indescri able as the perfume of some flower of which the species became extinct in our Occident before the modern languages were born. Transplanted successfully it cannot be; under a foreign sun its forms revert to something altogether different, its colors fade, its perfume passes away. The Japanese woman can be known only in her own country—the Japanese woman as prepared and perfected by the old-time education for that strange society in which the charm of her moral being, her delicacy, her supreme unselfishness, her child-like piety and trust, her exquisite tactful perception of all ways and means to make happiness about her can be comprehended and valued. . . .

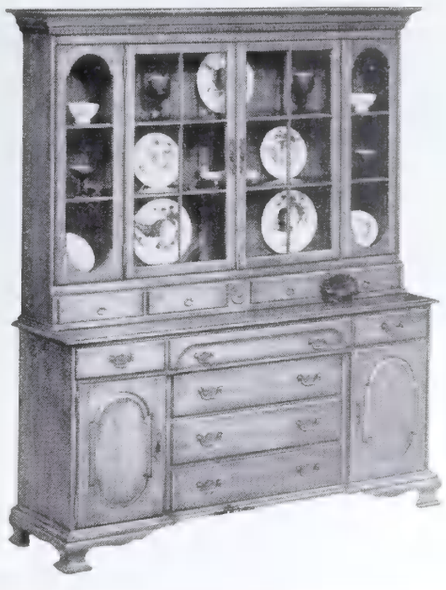
"To watch her at home, where she is free to be comely—merely to see her performing any household duty, or waiting upon guests, or arranging flowers, or playing with her children—is an education in Far Eastern aesthetics for whoever has the head and the heart to learn. . . . But is she not, then, one may ask, an artificial product, a forced growth of Oriental civilization? I would answer both 'Yes' and 'No.' She is an artificial product in only the same evolutional sense that all character is an artificial product; and it required tens of centuries to mold her. She is not, on the other hand, an artificial type, because she has been particularly trained to be her true self at all times when circumstances allow, or, in other words, to be delightfully natural.

"The old-fashioned education of her sex was directed to the development of every quality essentially feminine and to the suppression of the opposite quality. Kindliness, docility, sympathy, tenderness, daintiness—these and other attributes were cultivated into incomparable blossoming. 'Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever: do noble things, not dream them all day long.' Those words of Kingsley really embody the central idea in her training. Of course the being, formed by such training only, must be protected by society; and by the old Japanese society she was protected. Exceptions did not affect the rule. What I mean is that she was able to be purely herself, within certain limits of emotional etiquette, in all security.

"Her success in life was made to depend on her power to win affection by gentleness, obedience, kindliness—not the affection merely of a husband, but of the husband's parents and grandparents, and brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law—in short of all the members of a strange household. Thus to succeed required angelic goodness and patience; and the Japanese woman realized at least the ideal of a Buddhist angel. A being working only for others, thinking only for others, happy only in making pleasure for others—a being incapable of unkindness, incapable of selfishness, incapable of acting contrary to her own inherited sense of right and, in spite of this softness and gentleness, ready at any moment to lay down her life, to sacrifice everything at the call of duty. Such was the character of the Japanese woman.



"Most strange may seem the combination, in this child-soul, of gentleness and force, tenderness and courage, yet the explanation is not far to seek. Stronger within her than wifely affection or paternal affection or even maternal affection, stronger than any womanly emotion, was the moral conviction born of her great faith.

"This religious quality of character can be found among ourselves only within the shadow of cloisters, where it is cultivated at the expense of all else. The Japanese woman has been, therefore, compared to a Sister of Charity. But she had to be very much more than a Sister of Charity—daughter-in-law and wife and mother, and to fulfill without reproach the multiform duties of her triple part. Rather might she be compared to the Greek noble woman—to Antigone, to Alcestis.

"With the Japanese woman, as formed by the ancient training, each act of life was an act of faith: Her existence was a religion, her home a temple, her every word and thought ordered by the law of the cult of the dead. . . . This wonderful type is not extinct, though surely doomed to disappear. A human creature so shaped for the service of gods and men that every beat of her heart is duty, that every drop of her blood is moral feeling, were not less out of place in the future world of competitive selfishness, than an angel in hell."

How to Travel Japanese

Some practical suggestions on how to get there and how to comport yourself once you do—in a restaurant, in an inn, and in the controversial bath

By MARION GOUGH

■ You can be in Japan for a long time before you get there, if you fly to Tokyo via Japan Air Lines from San Francisco, Los Angeles, or Seattle. The flight adds up to a short course in Japanese manners and customs, a sort of briefing in what you'll find when you reach Nihon, as the Japanese call their country. And before the plane has left the ground, you will already have experienced the irrational sensation that constantly assails Westerners in this intriguing country—a feeling of surprise that the things you've heard and read about Japan are actually true. They really do wear kimono; here's the hostess dressed in one. They really do use hot towels before meals; here are steaming towels being presented to you in a little basket. On your cocktail tray are those incredible crackers of rice flour and seaweed and the slivers of dried squid, along with the kind of snacks you're used to.

This will probably be your first introduction to sake, the rice wine usually served warm in tiny cups from a tiny bottle, or Suntory, the Japanese Scotch, or the excellent Asahi beer. And probably the greatest delight of all will be your first beautiful meal-on-a-tray, the food so delicately and pictorially composed you're almost reluctant to disturb it. It will probably surprise you by its excellence and intriguing variety, too. This is your chance, in the presence of your peers, to experiment with hashi, the wooden chopsticks, without feeling self-conscious; and it's a good idea to get used to them, because knives and forks aren't always going to be available, especially in the purely Japanese restaurants where we urge you to go.

For their moments of recreation, as you will later discover, the Japanese like to slip into something loose. In your case you relax in a happi coat, the hip-length cotton kimono worn by Japanese workers, furnished to passengers much as Japanese inns provide kimono for guests. JAL even breaks you into the shoe-removal ceremony by replacing your shoes with socks.

All in all, by the time the plane is gliding over Tokyo Bay, you've had an absorbing indoctrination at least in some of the externals of the intriguing culture you're about to enter, including the deft and attentive service you find everywhere in Japan. It's such personal, almost affectionate service that you feel you are being "looked after" as opposed to being merely "waited on," as one is in the West.

The flight is an excellent argument for traveling to a country via the country's own national carriers. And JAL will extend this culture-conditioning even further when its new DC-8 Jet Couriers go into service on August 12, for the plane interiors are designed to put you into the very atmosphere of a Japanese house, with sliding shoji, flower arrangements, and carpeting patterned like tatami, the woven rice-straw floor covering used in Japan.

Cost of the flight, West Coast to Tokyo, via DC-7C, is $1,170 round trip, first class; $878.40 round trip, tourist class. Flights from San Francisco and Los Angeles stop at Honolulu, take about 23 hours. Seattle flights, via Anchorage, take about 18 hours. (Please turn to page 121)

MR. AND MRS. BARAD WERE AT MARTHA SLEEPER'S STORE IN OLD SAN JUAN WHEN TOM HOLLYMAN SNAPPED THIS SHOT.

"Mel spotted that Rum Collins and all shopping stopped"

—writes Susan Barad, who learned the magnetic power of the Rum Collins in Puerto Rico.

I NEVER thought I'd be frustrated by a Rum Collins. But I was.

Mel had been buzzing all over Puerto Rico inspecting sites for a textile plant. But finally I persuaded him to come shopping in Old San Juan. He behaved like a lamb till he saw that Rum Collins. Then—no more shopping.

I must admit Mel had some excuse. He was tired, poor dear. And that dry, white Puerto Rican rum gives a long drink the zip and tingle of a cocktail.

One bartender told us that Puerto Rican rum got its extra dry zip from being distilled at high proof. Another said it was the aging that did it. A third said, "Piffle! It's all because of our mountain water."

All I know is, my husband now flatly refuses to buy any brand of rum unless the words Puerto Rican Rum are on the label. He may seem fussy. But he's right.

RUM COLLINS

Juice of 1 lemon (about 1 oz.); tsp. sugar; 2 oz. white rum; shake with ice; pour unstrained into tall Collins glass. Fill with club soda; garnish with lemon slice and cherry.

Why an issue on Japan?

● Why should we learn about the ways and values of a foreign culture, especially when it takes a lifetime to understand our own?

Our answer is simple. It is worth doing if it helps you exercise new muscles of awareness, if it opens your eyes to things you have missed.

Our American ways are predominantly emphatic, exuberant, positive, and forceful. The cultural ways of Japan are restrained, nonemphatic, suggestive, tranquil, and understated. Yet Japan's aesthetics have produced depths of beauty of which we can be very jealous. Their gardens are the most delightful in the world. Their food has an elegance and sophistication unparalleled even in France. And their understanding of great lasting beauty—in objects, in rooms, in color schemes—surpasses that of any other culture.

Furthermore, we share many common interests, because for centuries they have been living more nearly as we do in suburban America—in separate houses surrounded by private gardens, designed to perform as extensions of the rooms from which they are viewed.

This entire issue is a synthesis of what we believe is significant about the 1200-year-old aesthetic development of Japan. This uninterrupted pursuit of beauty contains meaning for your life—regardless of the future course of history.

What Japan can contribute to your way of life

● If you are interested in improving your way of living you will gather helpful information from anywhere and everywhere—at home and abroad. Japan is a gold mine in this respect, judged by all the standards that HOUSE BEAUTIFUL uses.

Nothing in our Western world can compare with the role that aesthetics has played in Japanese life for 1,200 years. The Japanese have prized sensitivity to beauty since the 8th Century. An important word in their vocabulary of aesthetics is aware, which is not too unlike our word "aware," and generally means sensitivity to things or subtlety of discrimination. One writer called it the "ah-ness" of things. The Japanese have not distinguished between the beautiful and practical, with the result that their most commonplace objects are worth paying serious attention to as aesthetic achievements. Every necessity is considered a chance to have beauty.

So you have a whole people — regardless of class — remarkably alert to beauty in living, speaking, dressing,

On first glance the room shown on these four pages looks extremely simple. But that is only because it is underfurnished by our standards. In truth, the structure is much embellished with a rich variety of patterns and materials. The empty floor space is refurnished several times a day with a few exquisite objects, depending on the event to occur. No room in a Japanese house is assigned a specific function, due to the system of keeping everything put away except what is in use. Any room can be put to use sleeping, eating, entertaining, studying. This is in a famous Kyoto residence called Sumiya, which was built in 1657 in the Edo Period, and is now open to the public. It is a good example of the shoin style of architecture which is still widely used today.

Many rich components go into the building of most Japanese-style rooms. The detail below is a close-up of the hardware and surface of the sliding doors on a small cupboard in the room shown above. The maple leaf repeats in both the sliding door-pull and in the rich brocade, which covers the wood of the sliding door. This is typical of the custom-order approach to possessions of all sorts. Even small counter restaurants have their china made to order with matching match boxes, doorway curtains, and wrapping paper for take-out lunches. Even ready-to-wear kimonos have spaces where family crests may be embroidered.

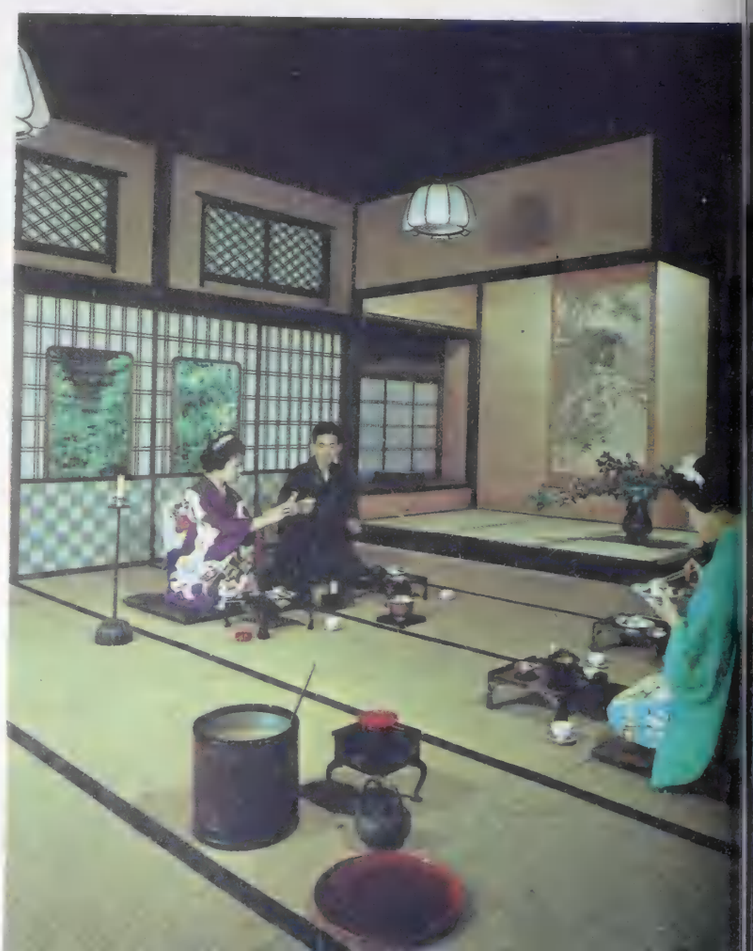
and behaving. And you have the rare chance to see what results when such a point of view has had the chance to develop uninterruptedly for centuries.

We are not recommending that we transplant or copy the Japanese way. But if we can understand the attitudes and values that produced such sensitivity and awareness, it can help us find our own American way to the same rewarding ends.



The most notable thing is the serenity of the houses, the gardens and the domestic works of art. This characteristic is quite frequently mistaken for simplicity or denial. But, upon deeper analysis, it clearly stems from a highly controlled, highly developed complexity. The illusion of simplicity comes from (Please turn the page) the fact that they have put their development effort where it will count the most: the making of an integrated whole. They haven't designed piecemeal or part by part. They sense the interrelation of house and garden, the look of food seen against the dish, the effect of clothing seen against a room or a garden. They seem to have learned that, no matter the proposition (room, garden, costume), there should not be too many high points of interest: that even a quiet, unassertive general background permits only a few dramatic opportunities in any situation. They know you can't hit high C too many times in a song or it will be all screeching. So in their homes and gardens they underplay skillfully and calculatingly and gain greatly in effectiveness.

WHAT JAPAN CAN

Because generations have been trained to sensitiveness, the Japanese take into account things most Westerners usually miss: the emotional effects to be achieved by a turning path, the changing (Please turn to page 119)

At left, you see the same room as that shown on the previous pages furnished as it would be when the master of the house is expecting guests for poetry reading. Tea will be served (though not a tea ceremony), so the tea things are out and ready. The folding screens have been brought out in honor of this occasion. Normally the wall against which they are placed looks as it does above—with sliding doors (fusuma) in a wave pattern in two shades of gray. The gentleman is reading the guest book of this house, started in the 14th Century, which contains nothing but tanka poems (of 31 syllables arranged 5,7,5,7,7). All are original compositions of the guests.

The space above the sliding interior partitions is always occupied by a fretwork grille, which permits ventilation between rooms at all times. (See its location in top picture.) These grilles are usually intricately carved, and an enormous variety of designs can be seen—even in the same house. Count how many kinds of pattern you can see in this one room. Not simple is it? Yet the result is not jumpy or busy, thanks to the organizing influence of the module—shared by the tatami, shoji, and fusuma.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

The Most

● The main message that the Japanese house can have for Americans is the obliging way it can be manipulated. The size of rooms can be changed by opening up the sliding doors or by removing them altogether. Outside walls, which are also sliding, can be manipulated in a variety of ways as well as removed altogether during hot humid weather.

With so many variables, a house can accommodate itself to changing social requirements and changing climate needs. In summer it can be a complete open pavilion, with the breeze blowing through every nook and cranny. In winter it can be closed with as many as three or four sets of surfaces.

At night, or during storms, another set of solid wood shutters come into play. These night shutters make bedrooms dark, add a safety factor against burglars, keep dampness off the paper shoji. They have tiny sliding apertures for ventilation. The night shutters slide out of sight during the day in shutter boxes that are built at the "end of the run" on the outside wall of the house.

As a climate control (Please turn the page)

Reed panels replace paper shoji for hot, humid weather. They soften the light and provide semi-privacy, allowing maximum air movement through the house. Whole panels lift out of track for storage during winter. This new house in traditional style is the Tokyo residence of Mr. and Mrs. Yamagato. Isohachi Yoshida, architect.

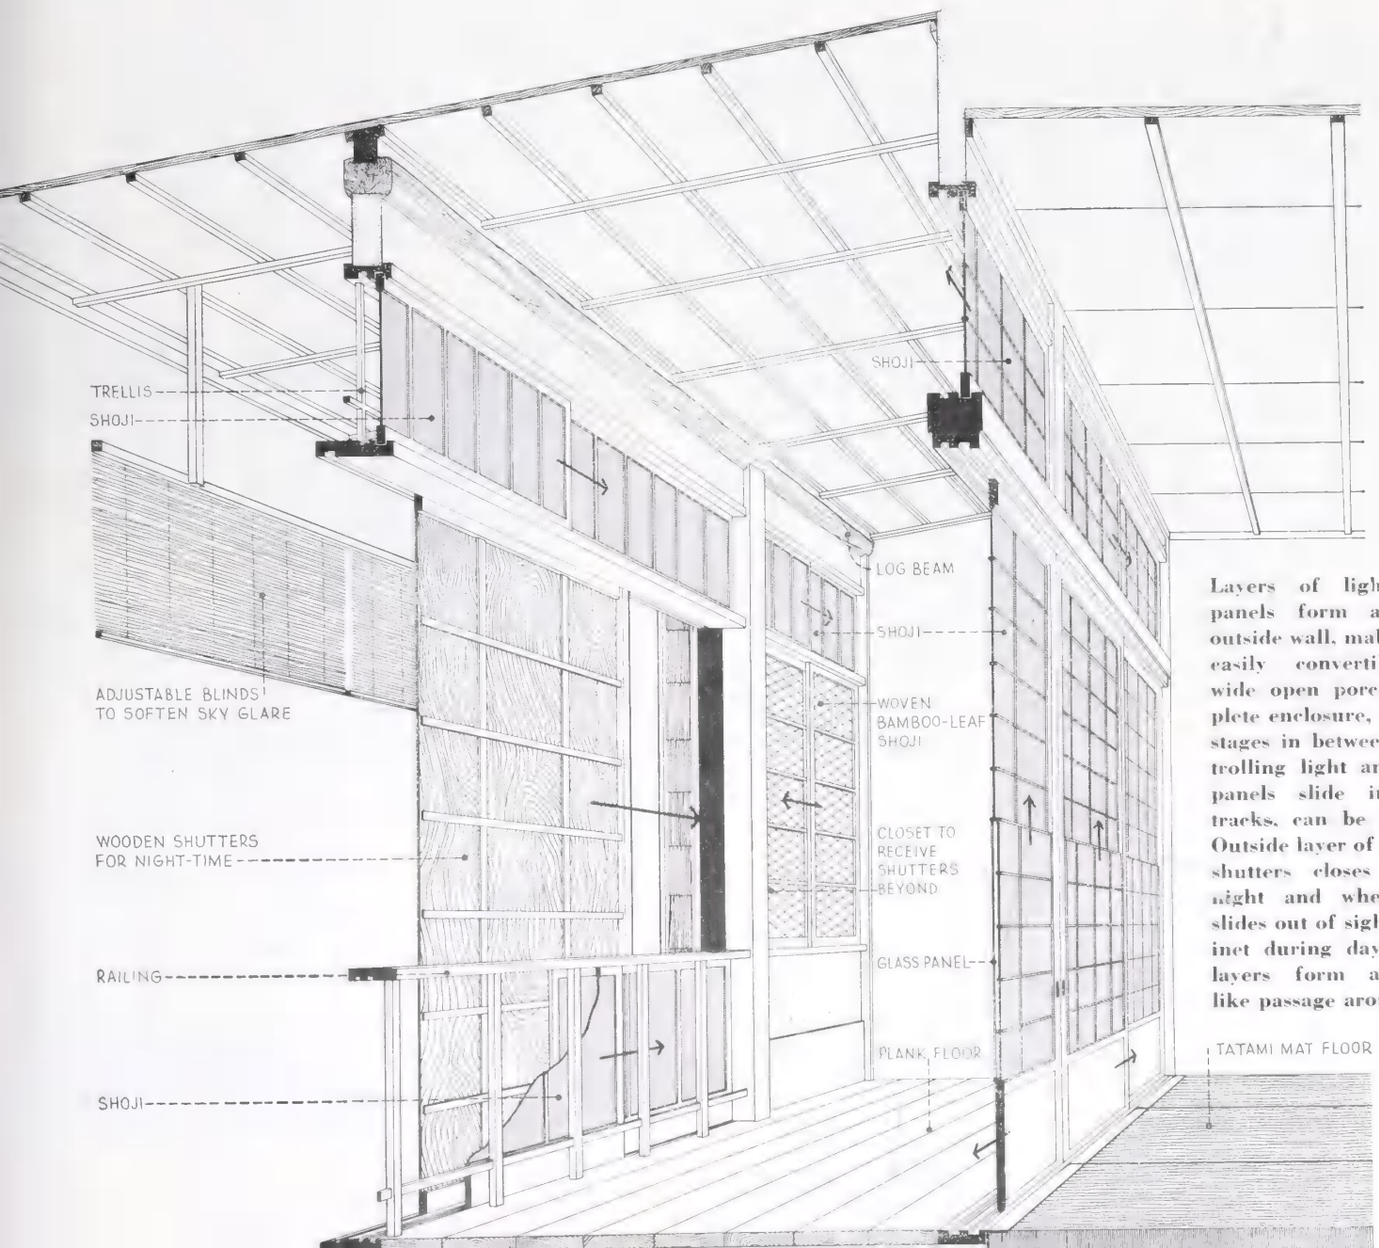
Lower half of shoji is glazed. Papered panel, within frame, slides up for extra daylight and view without outside air.



Outer wall, across narrow veranda, has solid wood shutters for nights, as well as small paper shoji in transom and in railing for breeze control at floor.

All wood shutters slide into storage compartment at end of the run. Access is through small doors at right.

Flexible Houses in the World

Layers of light, sliding panels form a versatile outside wall, making house easily convertible from wide open porch to complete enclosure, with many stages in between for controlling light and air. All panels slide in wooden tracks, can be lifted out. Outside layer of solid wood shutters closes house at night and when stormy, slides out of sight into cabinet during day. The two layers form a veranda-like passage around house.

SIX PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Even Western-style room uses the architectural grammar of the sliding wall units. Here are four sets: glass, screening, paper shoji, wood.

Paper shoji could be used alone or in combination with glass panels. Think of shoji as sheer glass curtains, softening and diffusing.

PHOTOGRAPH BY NORMAN CARVER, JR.

The majority of interior partitions in Japanese houses are made by sliding panels (called fusuma), whose main advantage is that they can be lifted out easily. In this way a suite of rooms may be quickly turned into one. Fusuma may be plain, as shown here, or richly decorated with a panorama across all the panels. Many are important art works.

Paper-covered sliding shoji, the equivalent of our windows, have merits not fully appreciated until you see them in Japan and discover the shadow-play that they invite from the plants in the garden. Carefully pruned specimens, placed close enough to the house, throw interesting shadows when the winter sun is traveling low in the sky. Full sun on a white shoji makes cheerful, non-glaring brilliance.

Note interesting pattern on ceiling achieved by eleven separate tracks on which these sliding units travel. It is intricate, yet simple-looking!

At the bottom, the tracks occur on two levels; the rain shutters and screening occur on the lower outer level. Five variables are possible.

All sliding units meet at the corner inside a post that uses a rock as a footing. The rock has been carved out to permit units to meet.

system the Japanese house cannot be matched anywhere else in the world, thanks to the wide variety of its manipulatable parts. The six pictures above show a contemporary version of the flexible wall principles. Four sets of sliding elements can be used singly or in combination with each other. Panels of glass, paper, insect screening, and wood all slide back into wall pockets, so designed that all panels can be received at once. Thus the total opening can be absolutely clear.

The thought behind the designing of Japanese houses becomes quite clear and reasonable, once you have been there in the summer. For they have high rainfall and high humidity and high temperatures, at least five months of the year. The Japanese house appears highly rational in the light of these tropical conditions. The broad roof overhangs give protection against rain and the dazzling glare of the white humid sky. The veranda that encircles the house protects the straw mats from driving rain. The absence of paving in the surrounding garden is equally rational, for it would increase the heat more than the breathing earth does. But this breath of the earth is very moist, so the floor of the house is raised to let air blow through below, as well as through, the rooms. For the same reasons, they do not coat wood surfaces with paints, so they may breath instead of rot. The patina you see on their wood structures has a beauty that can be gained only from exposure to the elements. (In new houses they speed up the aging process by coating the wood surface with a mixture of charcoal soot and persimmon juice, leaving the grain open and making a rich dark brown color.) We would do well to imitate their rationality, if not their ways.

This interesting and versatile detail is one that could very easily be used in the United States, especially in climates with great weather variation. It has much to recommend it because all the units move out of sight when not wanted.

Many houses have a kura, or storeroom, as a repository for family possessions, each lovingly nested in its own marked box or meticulously packaged and stowed on shelves or racks. It is sometimes a separate building, but is always placed where it is easily available, for frequently used things are also kept here. In this land of frame houses storerooms are built to resist fire. See thick wall and fire doors below.

Ample Storage—secret to the uncluttered look

● The clean, spare look of Japanese rooms might lead you to suspect that the Japanese resist possessions and that this "emptiness" is a sign of austerity. Actually, they need and own many changes of possessions. In a single day, they replace the room furnishings several times—for sleeping, eating, sitting. And with every season and for every festival, some furnishings are changed.

The need to keep these replacements easily available in their small houses has produced some ingenious storage methods. Most frequently used possessions are kept on shelves behind sliding doors. Many houses have a special room for storage.

PHOTOGRAPH FROM "THE JAPANESE HOUSE AND GARDEN"

One wall of this room is designed to store kimono, which are folded flat and kept in drawers or on shelves concealed behind sliding doors. Doors here resemble room-dividing fusuma.

Some houses have furniture-like storage walls of shelves and cabinets. They are treated like architecture, barely ornamented except for the matched wood graining and rich hardware.

The Japanese genius for getting the most out of small space turns the staircase into a storage cupboard. The otherwise unused area under the stairs in the home of potter Kanjiro Kawai is built up into a bank of easily accessible cabinets of varied size.

The garden as the visual wall of the room is a relatively new idea in America. But it is at least 1,000 years old in Japan. The sliding walls are put away in hot weather so the garden truly becomes part of the house. Great artistry in the design of these garden backdrops has been developed.

The garden as part of the house

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER

● The close relation of the garden to the house is easily understood when you learn about the openability of most houses. This could only lead to a union and deep sympathy with nature. All the phenomena of climate become more discernible. And man is ranged on the same level with all other natural things: plants, trees, animals, mountains, lakes, seas—even stones.

So the Japanese garden is nothing more than a skillful attempt to recreate nature, to make it seem that it had always been there and the house dropped into some previously existing, enchanting condition.

Since the garden is to be so intimately associated with the interior of the house—even in winter—they strive to make it permanently attractive. It may have peaks of glory, but it must never look seedy. This substantially affects the choice of materials and plants.

Houses perch in the garden as lightly as birds, seem as ready to take wing. They never give the feeling that anything has been pushed around to make way for the structure. All houses are raised 20 to 26 inches above grade, giving them a vantage point for the viewing of the total garden scene.

The Japanese try not to show everything from one spot, creating mystery, stimulating your imagination. Each view withholds some part of itself from revelation. The garden paths turn, disappearing behind hillock, rock, or shrub.

Japanese houses seem delicately dropped into their gardens, as though they will not be there permanently. Verandas, sheltered by wide roof overhangs, encircle much of the house, inviting you to sit quietly and contemplate.

The admiration of nature and of the change of the seasons amounts almost to a religion in Japan. This summer house on Lake Biwa is protected from the glare of the water by the line of grasses. But the owners let them go uncut, more to watch them grow, turn brown, and wither than for their practical use as glare-breakers. The reeds, rushes, and grasses that grow in water have long been popular reference points for poetry writing. For instance:

Short as the joints of bamboo reeds
That grow beside the sea
On pebble beach at Naniwa,
I hope the time may be
When thou'rt away from me.

How architecture can reveal the "core of things"

At first glance the villa seems to hold little interest. The main structure steps back in a series of apparently unrelated jogs. Actually, the design is an elegant avoidance of symmetry.

Man and nature, working in close harmony, produce a beauty not otherwise possible. As you walk to one of the teahouses on the grounds at Katsura, you pass this hand-washing bowl at the entrance. Man has crafted it, placed it in position, and arranged stones around it, but nature added the aging lichen and the curve of the fern, without which the arrangement would have been a raw intrusion.

From every vantage point at Katsura there is much to see and to absorb. As the building steps back, the march of roof lines becomes evident (see cover photo also). This roof pattern is repeated on the ground in the gravel drip strip that meticulously follows the edge of the overhanging eave above it.

PHOTOGRAPH BY NORMAN CARVER, JR.

Under its annual mantle of snow, the palace shows new facets of its beauty. Here, framing the white roof and shoji, the dark wood of the structure becomes an even more dominant pattern.

The ponds and lakes at Katsura have been carefully designed to make the most of sky and garden reflections (see plan, page 115). Here, a peninsula of river-washed stones leads the eye to a stone lantern, then beyond it to a teahouse across the water.

● Of all the buildings in Japan, a 17th-century villa holds the most meaning for Americans today. Not because of the materials used, for they are more modest than in a New England farmhouse. Not because of the room arrangement, for it was built to house a prince. And not because of its visual beauty, for in this it is matched by many buildings in Japan. It is simply that Katsura Palace is more than architecture; to experience it is to understand more of life itself and of man's place in nature. In this it more closely resembles a great work of the more traditional arts—poetry, music, or drama. "We are in another world," writes Fosco Maraini of Katsura. "The simplicity here is no return to the primitive, but the distilled essence achieved by one who has run through the whole gamut of richness, complication, magnificence, and has now found his way to the core of things and rejected the rest."*

In Japan the fine arts of living include flower-arranging and the tea ceremony

No young Japanese woman is considered fully educated until she has learned the arts of flower-arranging and of performing the tea ceremony. Both require serious study and involve such related matters as design, presentation, restraint, emotional control, and physical grace. A girl may spend as long as two years being trained in the tea ceremony, a ritual which in itself reveals nearly every aspect of the Japanese philosophy of life. Flower-arranging is in a sense never really mastered; it can be studied for a lifetime. The girls you see gathering flowers (below) are Japan Air Lines hostesses, who are proficient in both arts and present travelers with a fine introduction to the Japanese way of living.

1 This entryway of a house has only 40 inches of space for a garden. But skillfulness and artistry have turned this scrap of land into a charming little event. A few rocks, gravel, a few shafts of bamboo, a little water, one shrub were the only elements used. Reed curtains hanging from the roof overhang falsify closeness of the neighboring wall.

2 A walled private garden for a bathroom in a modern Japanese house shows how much interest can be created in a little space about 10 feet square.

3 The ideal in room planning is to give all main rooms separate and private gardens, preferably arranged so no other room shares the garden. This one, in the Tori Inn in Kyoto, connects with the garden of another room, but cannot be seen from it, maintaining privacy.

The Smallest Gardens in the world

● No gardens in the world can surpass those in Japan. Their charming serenity is highly conducive to peaceful relaxation. Their real miracle is that they have made the smallest spaces seem uncrowded and uncontrived.

They do it with many techniques that create the illusion of space: with dwarf plants, which are kept under control by rigorous pruning: with a highly developed sense of scaling: by surfacing boundary walls with materials from nature, such as twigs, bark, stone, or bamboo, so nothing ever signals "this is where nature stops."

One important trick is that they leave plenty of empty spaces, so nothing seems crowded. These empty spaces are literally bare, though they may be moss-covered or gravel-covered. But they also bank up plants and rocks in depth, so that each element masks portions of the elements adjacent to it—thus disguising the space conditions. Most gardens are impervious to seasonal change, because of the wide use of evergreen materials.

Many books have been written analyzing the secrets of Japanese garden design. One of the best, summing up the principles very clearly and succinctly, is David Engel's Japanese Gardens for Today, published by Charles Tuttle.

More pictures on the next two pages

It is common for the house to wrap around tiny gardens. These little spaces may be planted to resemble woodland conditions. Or they may be designed more chastely, with only gravel, rocks, a drift of bamboo, and a carefully pruned tree. Utmost care is used in selection of material.

A plant seen close-up in a small intimate space is easier to pay close attention to than the same plant in a bigger wilderness. Seeing nature in such sharp focus may be the reason the Japanese get more pleasure from observing it.

FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

FIVE PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Here is a woodland glade, complete with trees, shrubs, flowers, and waterfall in a space no more than 12 feet wide. There is a fence along the boundary line at the right, but it is hardly visible, and the whole impression given is that of looking into an endless depth. The illusion is accomplished by numerous changes of plant materials and levels of plantings.

Japanese bring their plantings right up to the house, which gives them a landscape in depth. See how close these trees are to the actual structure. We Americans tend to use broad sweeps of lawn to set off our gardens, but with smaller lots and our need to reduce maintenance, we can learn from Japan how to cut down space but still have a world of interest.

Behind this Japanese house, you can wander through what is apparently a natural woodland. The placement of the stepping stones, the incursion of plants into the walkway, the almost-overgrown quality of the area, create the impression that the land has always been this way, that the house has been set into an already-established condition. All the materials were, of course, carefully chosen and placed to achieve this illusion. The thicket of trees in the background marks the boundary line.

The Japanese are experts at disguising the actual space in a garden. Here the path disappears as if it went on endlessly. Actually, the partially hidden bamboo fence is the limit of the garden. Every device is used to prevent your eye from coming up against a finality—there always seems to be more, if it were only possible for you to see it.

Since the houses are set so close together, the Japanese focus attention down to the immediate foreground, where the sense of other houses is not a factor. Here, the sweep of gravel running between the moss on one side and the stones set in mortar on the other suggests the meandering of a stream. It makes the most of a narrow ten-foot strip.

What Japan has ## that we may profitably borrow

They have serenity and tranquility in their moments at home.
There are secrets about how to do it, wherever you are

By Anthony West

When I was in Japan, I often found myself recalling an incident in my childhood which gave me my first lesson in art and design. A painter friend of my mother's gave me a splendid box of colored pencils for my birthday. To show him how much I appreciated his gift, I drew him a snake-like dragon covered with colored scales, using every color in the box.

To my eyes the monster was gorgeous, and I showed it to the painter with considerable pride when he came to see us a few days later. He was not impressed. "Hmm," he said. "I see that box had too many colors in it for you to handle." Then he quickly drew a little black dragon with a yellow line round its mouth beside mine, looked at it for a second, and added a small red tongue. My dragon with its hundred colored scales went out like a light that had been turned off. There was nothing left on the page but the new dragon with its scarlet tongue between its yellow lips.

"See what I mean?" he said, and I said "yes." But I only understood what he meant twelve years later after I had spent a week vainly trying to paint a pink and white model posed in such a way that her skin picked up the reflected light from a huge bunch of flowers of a great many colors. I had lovingly put all the colors of the flowers and of her flesh into the picture, but though they were all there, they couldn't be seen. In despair I shut up shop and went off to an art gallery to look at some paintings by acknowledged masters which I remembered as being particularly brilliant and rich in color.

When I looked at them with my particular problem in mind, I discovered that although they looked colorful they were in fact extremely economical in the use of colors. In each case a few brilliant touches suffused the whole canvas. In some paintings I had thought of as bright pictures less than a quarter of the surface was given up to what one thinks of as color; the rest of it was negative or neutral in character, providing a sounding board on which the resonance of the actual color was developed.

In Japan, time and time again, I would find myself faced with this paradox. I would sit in a room that gave an impression of warmth and color, yet I would find in the end that it was, from the Western point of view, almost devoid of color. Or I would start measuring up a house that had impressed me as being very spacious and find that it was in actuality extremely small. Or I would find myself remembering as extremely luxurious a house that was, by American or European standards, virtually unfurnished.

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

The smallest house has much in common with the homes of wealthy Japanese. The idyllic natural setting, the way the structure expresses itself visibly on the outside, the elegant details (note the rail at the window sill), resemble those in the most expensive houses, but executed on a smaller scale.

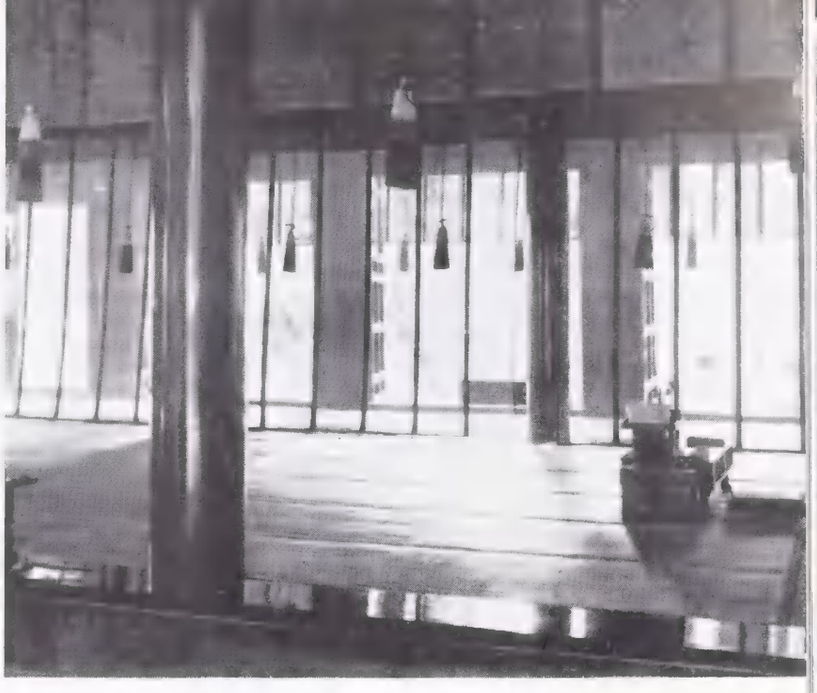
While I was admiring these effects and wondering how they were achieved, I noticed something else about Japanese architecture and design. There is as wide a spread between extremes of wealth and poverty in Japan as there is anywhere else in the world, but there is no country in the world where the homes of the rich and the poor have so much in common. A European king's palace is almost as much unlike a farm worker's cottage as a Texas oil man's house is unlike a cold water apartment in Hoboken. But the house of the richest Japanese has more in common with the poorest country cottage than it has differences from it. This is not because there is anything naive or simple about the Japanese, who were until recently a long way ahead of Europeans in the sophistication and refinement of their architecture, but because they believe in simplicity.



What I learned all over again in Japan was the lesson of the color box, which the painter had taught me. The lesson is a paradox that can be expressed in various ways: that freedom is in restriction: or that everything is too much. The peculiar dilemma of Americans is not that we have everything, but that when it comes to designing our homes we can do anything we want.

We have the most glorious color box there ever was to dip into, and an almost infinite variety of materials, fabrics and styles to choose from. But from the American house emanates a restless and temporary quality, and all too often its interior spaces have an arbitrary quality that is disquieting and unsettling.

All this agitation of colors, styles, and proportions is noticeably lacking in the Japanese house, which has an almost religious feeling of tranquility and harmony about it. And yet it is infinitely more elastic than the American house. Most of its exterior walling can be manipulated for the variables of weather and removed altogether in the hot summer months. Its interior arrangements are even more flexible.

The first time I went to see a Japanese friend who is a teacher, I sat in a large upstairs room in which he was lecturing to fifty students who had come to visit him. The next time I came to his house the big upstairs room had become four bedrooms. This change, which can be made in the internal layout of any Japanese house, was brought about by putting up and taking down wall panels called fusuma. Some fusuma are plain, and others are decorated. Some houses have several different sets of fusuma so that the walls in the house can change color as well as change places at a few minutes notice. In wealthy homes and in temples the fusuma are painted with motifs and scenes appropriate to different seasons and to different occasions, and some of these decorative sets of spare walls are among the world's great works of art.

The question for the Westerner is how all this flexible use of internal space and structural elasticity can be achieved without creating a confused mess. The answer the Japanese gives is that this freedom works because it is freedom inside a rigid framework of restraint. Every fusuma in Japan is the same size, and all wall heights and spaces between upright members of the frame of a house are proportionate to the standard fusuma size. (Please turn the page)

Japanese dislike the harsh brightness and sharp-edged shadows created by direct daylight. The soft, contemplative light seen here is in keeping with the restraint they show in all matters.

Soft modulated light, filtered through screens, sets the mood of the Japanese interior

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY NORMAN CARVER, JR.

To keep out the glare of the sky, houses in Japan use all kinds of devices: paper shoji, split bamboo screens, reed curtains. These can be arranged in multiple ways.

When you are seated on the floor, you see more sky than when standing, consequently get more sky glare. Shade (left) has hooks to hang at any height (below).

How a Japanese house changes its face from winter to summer: All the interior partitions (the fusuma) can be removed and most of the exterior panels can be removed or slid back into storage pockets. This opens the house from end to end, creating a pavilion-like structure over an open interior space.

The horizontal control of interior space is just as rigid as the vertical, though in the case of floor space the unit of control is the tatami. This is a sweetly-scented straw mat two inches thick and six feet by three feet on the surface. It provides the governing module for every enclosed space in Japan and has done so since the beginning of Japan's recorded history. Ultimately the ground plan of any Japanese building of any period, ancient or modern, resolves itself into multiples of a six-foot square, and the size of every enclosed space inside the building will be automatically in proportion to the total area under its roof. As fusuma are in a close relationship to tatami in point of size, the heights of the walls are always in harmony with dimensions of the floor spaces.

This voluntary acceptance of a quite arbitrary discipline and of a very high degree of standardization is the secret of the effortlessness with which the Japanese get their splendid architectural effects of serenity, calm, and freedom. They get these effects in structures closely confined by narrow city lots just as easily as they do when space is unlimited, and the harmony of good proportion often creates an illusion of unlimited space where there is very little room to spare.

What is just as important is that this discipline of proportion gives a coherence to the plans of Japanese houses that free planning often destroys. No matter whether they are plain rectangles or rectangles with an extension (like the New England house with its L); or if they flow around enclosed courtyards, run along one side of a garden, around the boundaries of a city lot, or along an ornamental pond; and no matter how casual their layout may at first appear to be, Japanese houses possess the quality of unity and organic wholeness which comes of having a relationship between all their parts.

It is the relationship between the rooms in the house, immediately appreciable in the nature of the vistas that open up when a third room is seen through a second, that is the leading theme in Japanese interior design and decoration. Now that the Western interior designer is turning away from the idea of the house as a set of self-contained boxes, isolated from each other not only by solid walls but also by conceptions of function (expressed by such terms as dining, study, living room, play room, and so on), toward the conception of fluid and interlocking space, the long experience the Japanese have had with its organization becomes valuable and for the first time relevant.

The first step toward understanding another person's experience is to understand the person, and this is as true when it comes to understanding an alien architectural and artistic tradition as it is when a domestic situation is involved. To my way of thinking, it is a mistake to try to understand Japanese art and the Japanese tradition of design by making a first approach to aesthetic principles. The Japanese say that their finest works of art and their finest houses reflect the spirit of shibui. This word expresses an interesting idea, but an extremely complicated one with subtleties that almost elude verbal explanations.

Shibui is the essence of Japanese culture, and it includes the ideas of balance, measure, restraint, control, discipline, elegance, and strength, though in a paradoxical and typically Japanese way. Strength used in accordance with the principle of shibui would seem to be easy and effortless, but it would be even more in line with shibui not to use it, while being strong. In architecture shibui would require the solution of all the problems of stress and tension not only by the most economical means, but also in such a way that there appears to be no problem and no need for a solution.

The Japanese are as fully appreciative of the structural aspects of their houses as they are of their interior spaces. The timber frame of a Japanese building is always a leading component of its decoration, and the main supports of the walls and roofs are always kept in plain sight. These structural timbers are often of specially chosen woods, selected for the beauty of their color or their grain or a combination of both. They are superbly finished in the more expensive houses, and the carpenter's work is in most cases superior to that which goes into the very best Western furniture. The framework of a house is a necessity, and a part of shibui is the confrontation and recognition of necessity as an integral part of life.

But another and equally important element in shibui is calm in dealing with necessities. The Japanese always go to great lengths to avoid the appearance of dynamic elements in the construction of a building. They like the static impression created by strong, clean, upright supports carrying timber crossbeams that seem to be held in place by their own weight, and they have a particular appreciation for the state of inertia created by an exact counter-balance of opposed forces. They dislike equally such dynamic Western styles as the Gothic which dramatizes thrust in the tense nervous lines of pointed arches, ribbed vaulting, and flying buttresses, and the post-Renaissance classical styles that use walls as a decorated mask behind which all engineering problems are ambiguously dealt with.

This is not to say that the Japanese avoid difficult construction problems. The largest wooden building in the world is in Japan, the Daibutsuden of the Todaiji temple at Nara, and the supporting structure of its roof is a masterpiece of earthquake-resistant elasticity and strength, which has stood all tests since its completion in 1708.

But while the problem of holding up so complex a structure has been solved by a dynamic use of cantilevers, considerable care has been taken to minimize this aspect of things. The building is so proportioned that the overhang, taking its eaves thirty feet out beyond the wall line, is made to seem as much as possible like the normal extension of a roof to protect the walls below it from rain, a feature of the ordinary Japanese house. The fascination of the Todaiji Daibutsuden, not otherwise a very engaging building, lies in the way its huge scale slowly becomes apparent in the course of a second or third visit. Many persons who have seen it only once go away without realizing how large it is. In so far as it is the most modest building of its size in the world, it is in accord with the (Please turn to page 116)

When you see a Japanese house opened this way for the summer, you realize why the structural details of the house are so carefully planned. At this time of year, the framework stands exposed and becomes the main design element. It is vividly clear here that the whole house is thought of as one large space that can be arranged inside into variously-sized areas. Interior partitions are considered only temporary dividers.

Discovery of another Gastronomic Planet

By ELIZABETH GORDON

● It's hard to understand how there could still be an undiscovered area in Gourmet Paradise. The amateur and professional gourmets of the world are habitual travelers who will go anywhere once they have heard the eating is good. They consider the world their "beat," and they probably are the truly international citizens, since they are quite unencumbered by prejudices. It did seem that they had been everywhere.

But no word had leaked to us, via the printed or spoken word, that Japan would be a gastronomic thrill. We had been told, by people who had even lived there, that it was "good but limited in variety." I had eaten three or four spectacularly good Japanese meals in Hawaii, but they had been ordered days in advance. I assumed they would not be representative of the food to be found in average Nippon restaurants. We assumed that the best food would not be found in restaurants but in homes, and that we would therefore not see the best.

Everything we assumed was wrong. Japan's cuisine turned out to be the peak in my 29 countries of traveling. Every one of the 149 meals I had were delicious. About 50 were Epicurean. Five or six I shall never forget as long as I live.

From what did this superiority arise? And can we have any of it in our own homes?

Yes, we can have it in our own homes. And once you know the nature of its superiority you will see what and how to do it yourself.

Part of this superiority arises from the fact that they use only the youngest and tenderest foodstuffs. Another reason for this superiority is that the method of preparation is so sensitively appropriate to the inherent nature and flavor of the food itself. Consequently, new nuances are brought out in old familiars like carrots, eggplants, cucumbers. Their best—whether it is beef, seafood, or vegetables—is better than our best. It is smaller, younger, or more carefully grown.

Now, mind you, we are not reporting on the diet of the average Japanese any more than we characterize French food on the basis of the factory workers' diet. Undoubtedly the average Japanese cannot afford the baby vegetables, or the fantastically good Matsuzaka beef. We are talking about upper-class food—lunches costing from $3 to $9 per person and dinners costing from $5 to $10 per person.

We discovered some basic truths which are above and beyond cost. Such a one is the new world of soup stocks and cooking stocks made of dried kelp and dried bonito and loaded with trace elements; dipping sauces and marinades that give new zest to familiar foods; preserved chestnuts that are better than candy. There was a whole world of tender sprouts and leaf (Please turn the page)

Picnic or lunch-box food typifies the whole of Japanese food: the wide variety, the artistic arrangements, the elegance of the presentation. Taking delicious and beautiful food outdoors to be eaten surrounded by the beauties of nature is standard Japanese practice. The ability to arrange a miscellany of things in so attractive a manner is a common quality. The foods in these pictures were arranged by a 17-year-old boy in a counter restaurant seating only 16 persons. Red blanket in family picnic scene is a traditional court gesture of welcome.

An assortment of foods displayed in a small neighborhood grocery store. You can tell how small everything is from the eggs. The baskets are about eight inches long, so you can see how miniature the vegetables are. Some cucumbers were so tiny and young they still had their flowers. String beans are as thin as a pencil. Vegetables are never piled on top of each other to be crushed, so they arrive in the kitchen in pristine condition. Being so small, they cook in a minute or two; the flavor is deepened rather than lost. We could profit from this preference for small things and shorter cooking time.

tips: fern fronds, ginger sprouts, lotus roots, lily bulbs, trefoil (a long-stemmed three-leaf clover), pepper-tree buds, horseradish sprouts, soy bean sprouts, young chrysanthemum leaves.

Some ingredients basic to their cuisine we literally have no counterpart for. Such a one is miso, a paste made from soy beans that may be sweet or salty or red or white, and can make a dressing for green vegetables, a marinade for meats, or the filling body of a soup. All delicious!

But there was an over-riding element, more important than these details. The total syndrome of Japanese ingredients and methods—the way all the parts fitted lyrically with all the other parts—towered like the Himalayas in the world's gastronomy. I had previously felt that the classic French cuisine, which you meet in the finest French homes (rather than in the famous restaurants that put a strain on your liver) was the purest, most elevated, and sensitive form of cooking extant. But my 149 meals in Japan made me shift gears very decidedly.

For not only is the Japanese cuisine worthy of the attention of the most serious gourmet, but it is nutritionally big news at this time in science's unfolding of our nutritional needs. For it is low in calories, low in animal fats, high in calcium, phosphorus, loaded with Vitamin A, and loaded with trace elements, thanks to their heavy use of the products of the sea—dried seaweeds and dried shrimp, fishes—and to the prevalent use of nut and vegetable oils.

It is a cuisine of which you can eat heartily, be gastronomically happy, yet still be below your recommended calories, very low on un- (Please turn to page 109)

One of the best indicators of the taste of "the man in the street" is the counter restaurant—tiny little places seating from eight to twenty persons. Invariably they are built of beautiful materials assembled with discrimination to produce a delightfully pleasing result. Such a one is "Izukin," a sushi restaurant near the Ginza where everything is in remarkably fine taste. The tea cup is custom-made and bears the management's symbol, as do their matches. All parts are carefully color-schemed to set each other off.

Beauty everywhere—even in

At the left is a general view of the rear in the same counter restaurant, where you may sit and watch the sushi made. Below is the entrance to a more elaborate restaurant. Umbrellas provided by the management to get you from car to front door are drying in sun. They are styled to make one color scheme.

Below, a typical office worker's lunch-box, which is delivered by a boy on a bicycle. Beautifully arranged in lacquered wood box will be delicious and varied foods. Prices range from 28¢ to $1. Regardless of price, box will be truly attractive and contents delicious.

Presenting something beautiful to the customer or passerby seems to be the goal of every shopkeeper and restaurant owner. The windows of such mundane establishments as laundries or ironmongers will contain elegant arrangements of flowers, rocks, dwarf trees, lacquer, or basketry. Above, a miniature tokonoma in the entryway of the counter restaurant "Izukin," also shown on opposite page. Depth is no more than six inches, yet flower arrangement is in scale to space.

Entrance to this tiny restaurant is embellished with a tiny landscaped garden, complete with a pool of running water, plants, bamboo backdrop, rock arrangements, and black pebble paving. This miniature garden is about six inches at its shallowest, no more than twelve inches at its fullest. Though small, it is exquisite and entirely typical of Japanese gardens.

Such precious little places have their practical side too. Customers may stoop and wash their hands in running water before entering the restaurant, even though they will be given wet, hot towels immediately after being seated inside. Water is constantly sprinkled on pebble paving, to keep down dust and to bring out the color and character in the rocks themselves.

the commonplace

By FRANCES HEARD

● In Japan a meal in the most modest counter restaurant is presented on the kind of china you'd be proud to set before your most fastidious guest. Your change may come on a little miracle of a lacquer tray, signed by the artist who made it. A Tokyo office worker sends out for lunch, and it arrives in a box worthy to be a jewel case.

You encounter artistry where you'd least expect it—in the refined form of a bucket or a broom, in a scrap of garden in the shadow of a window sill.

Such beauty in the commonplace evokes surprise and wonder in a Westerner. But to a Japanese, this is only as it should be. If it isn't beautiful, it isn't practical. For deeply ingrained in Japan's culture is the attitude that beauty is as urgent a human need as food, shelter, and sleep. And art—the conscious creation of beauty—becomes therefore an inseparable element of daily life in Japan for people at all levels. (Please turn the page)

Matchboxes of restaurants and commercial firms are like little works of art, designed with utmost care, because they advertise the firm's aesthetic values, as well as its services, to people who esteem good taste as an essential element in their business dealings.

Americans can do more than marvel at this work-of-art quality Japan gives to its most mundane objects of common use. We can take several lessons from it. We can re-evaluate our own curious tolerance in judging the aesthetics of our everyday possessions, as opposed to the more exacting standards of beauty we apply to what we call our "good" things, our Sunday best.

This to a Japanese is an artificial distinction. Beauty is absolute, and art is a vital part of every living moment, all the time, not something to be roped off as a pleasant extra and occasionally enjoyed. So a Japanese weighs the aesthetic quality of a sieve as critically as he does his finest kimono. And he is constantly looking about him for ways in which to put more artistry into every area of daily life. He polishes his garden leaves; he dampens the black river-washed pebbles in his entry-way to enhance the subtle glossiness of the wet rocks; he makes an art of folding the paper and tying the cord on a package.

And he is legion. In this phenomenally beauty-conscious country, where policemen are trained in the tea ceremony and friends correspond with each other in poetry, no one stratum of society has a corner on aesthetic awareness. It is the people themselves who keep the standards high. No esoteric dictatorish cult sets the pace or imposes styles. There is no "designing down to the mass taste." Rather it is the mass taste that insists that manufacturers design up. Talk (Please turn to page 111)

This is "common" china—the kind you would find in a counter restaurant or in everyday use in a home. A far cry it is, in delicacy of design and fineness, from the restaurant china most Westerners settle for. Restaurateurs vie with each other in the beauty of their tableware, because their design-conscious customers consider tasteful presentation equally as important as the food.

No corner is too small to be beautified, and the skill with which this is done is a tacit expression of its owner's good taste. Here a restaurant owner lets his aesthetic judgment be known by transforming a strip of land under his shop window into a charming rock garden, including a tiny pool (see far right). Background stones give rough surface for strawberry begonias to climb on. In the window is a display of restaurant's tableware and accessories.

FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

A restaurant lavatory reflects meticulous cleanliness and the imaginative approach of its owner, through pleasing flower arrangements and the aesthetic nicety of the black pebbles lining the basin. Pretty to look at when wet, they also prevent splashing.

Restrained pattern, asymmetry, quiet color, lack of obviousness, purity of form, the suggested rather than the defined line—all the qualities the Japanese admire in their finest art—reveal themselves in their everyday belongings. Their secret is that they never relax their highest standards of aesthetic judgment. The small square plates are part of a set which, characteristically, is matched in shape but unmatched in pattern.

● It usually astonishes Westerners to di cover that the writing of poetry amount to a national pastime in Japan. Busines men make it a hobby, friends commun cate with each other in verse. Even finan cial journals publish columns of poetr and more than fifty monthly magazine are devoted to it. And one of the grea annual events is the New Year poetr competition sponsored by the Emperor.

This urge to poetic expression seems a innate a cultural tradition as kimono an chopsticks. The Manyoshu, the second old est book in Japanese, compiled about 75 A. # of awareness—Haiku rhymed verse of seventeen syllables, the lines divided into five, seven, and five syllables. Within this almost telegraphic space, the writer expresses a moment of truth, setting down his observation of an especially vivid incident of daily life in which he perceives a more profound meaning than appears on the surface. Its thought is evoked by the commonplace, by nature, and familiar objects, and stated unassumingly, sparsely, with a simplicity in which are hidden depths to be pursued, if the reader is aware enough to pursue them for himself.

Bashō, Japan's greatest poet, who perfected the haiku in the 17th Century, saw some red pepper pods and wrote:

Red pepper pods!
Add wings to them,
and they are dragonflies!

In the similarity of pepper pods to the bodies of dragonflies he saw proof of his belief that all things are equally part of each other. In other words, his haiku reports one moment in his life when the sight of a few insignificant-seeming pepper pods gave him an intense perception of the one-ness of the universe, and made him feel more vividly a part of it.

But notice that he has stated the thought merely by suggesting it. The barest essentials are given—the rest is left for the reader to fill in for himself. For the haiku, like all other uniquely Japanese art forms, is an unfinished statement which the listener must complete out of his own imagination. It is like the black-and-white ink sketch where the line fades off, leaving the viewer to visualize for himself the completion of the empty space, or the moment of no-acting in a Noh drama when the audience senses for itself what the actor's motionless silence implies.

The haiku is, in short, shibui—an expression of Japan's highest criterion of beauty—unassuming, simple-seeming, full of depth but waiting to be fully discovered by the awareness its audience brings to it. (Read the discussion of shibui, page 88.)

Haiku should reflect the season in which they are written, and it must be stated or implied in the poem. (Bashō's pepper pods imply autumn.) Nature and natural objects are the usual subject matter.

The sampling of haiku given here represents some of Japan's favorites, from the 17th to the 20th Century, as translated by R. H. Blyth, Harold G. Henderson, and Curtis Hidden Page. In addition to the haiku poets quoted, Issa, Kikaku, Kyorai, and Ransetsu are some of the most famous.

In order to give the most accurate meanings of the Japanese words, the translations cannot always keep to the original five-seven-five syllable structure. In the Japanese, the verses do not rhyme.

To read haiku, the experts give us one admonition—don't look for symbolism and hidden meanings in the words. Simply try to feel the experience of the writer. Another introduction to haiku is through the record, "Haiku Poems," read by Alan Watts (MEA, 33⅓ rpm, $5.95).

Haiku is an exercise in awareness. And since the writer must crystallize an experience in a few words, the writing becomes something of a game. You will understand if you try writing haiku yourself. The results may not be great poetry, but the effort opens new windows on the world, revealing unexpected beauty.

A Long Experience with Beauty

Beauty, in its many forms, has preoccupied the Japanese people to a degree unmatched in history. So it is only reasonable that they should have arrived at a deeper grasp and penetration of what comprises beauty than has been achieved by other cultures that cared less.

You might say they acquired experience in judging beauty. They must have passed through those stages of poor judgment which we associate with nouveau riche: the falling for the shallow, the showy, the laboriously contrived, the tricky. Their mistakes, if there were any, are lost in the shadow of time. Their artifacts preserved in museums, temples, and shrines show that as far back as 322 A.D. their judgment about beauty had already been deeply cultivated.

Such books as The Tale of Genji and The Pillow Book reveal a "rampant aestheticism" as far back as the Heian Period (794-1392). At that time the upper classes were conversing in poetry. Beauty of penmanship was a cult. Everything, from music to manners to food to dress, was expected to be beautiful. Even religious ceremonies were viewed chiefly from an aesthetic point of view. Anybody who wanted to be somebody was expected to be able to play at least one musical instrument.

So it is not surprising that an exacting standard of connoisseurship has prevailed for at least ten centuries. Nor is it surprising that there developed a set of values and value-words by which to analyze th various grades and facets of beauty.

This system for the analyzing and grad ing of beauty seems, from HOUSE BEAUTI FUL's point of view, the most valuable les son to be learned from Japan. For ou Western world is quite loose and vagu when it comes to describing beauty. Ou approach to the subject is through a seman tic fog: we are for it, but we can't describ exactly what it is. We haven't hammered out a set of specifications for how to arriv at it, nor can we be very precise abou gradations between good, better, and best

If we can look at beauty as they look at it, we can enlarge our own understand ing enormously. Fortunately, it is easy t mprehend—or how could a whole nation ve been made into art lovers?

The key word for us to learn is shibui, adjective that denotes the ultimate in auty. (Shibusa is the noun for this concept.)

Neither word translates quickly or satisctorily, so it is easier to take over the panese words and make them our own. We have done this with many other forgn words, such as chic, garage, so why t again?)

Let us analyze the content of shibusa d shibui. It can be done by quoting Dr. etsu Yanagi, Director of the Museum of lk Crafts in Tokyo, writing in a magane called "Kokoro."

"Its first element is simplicity. To put another way, complex things are alien to ibusa. This first quality can also be scribed by the word 'austerity,' The tea remony devotees also called this the ustere quality,' and if we were to cite me simple, similar example, we might ention 'unadorned,' 'plain,' 'unfigured.' s everyone knows, the early masterpieces tea utensils were simple and unadorned. en articles which had family crests on em retained the inherent element of simicity. Therefore, over-decorated things d not become shibui tea things, and were t sought after by people. The English rd 'plain' is always submerged within ibusa.

"The second element can be called 'imicitness.' Simply put, it is the quality inward-inclusiveness, of pregnant-withaning, or of intrinsic meaningfulness. other words, it is the quality of stress inner meaning, so that it can also be lled 'depth,' and things which lack this pth do not achieve true shibusa. In other rds, superficial things are alien to ibusa. To borrow Lao Tse's words, we ight call this the 'beauty of blackness,' of subtlety and profundity (the reality the space contained within a tea cup).

"As for the aspect of rich-with-innereaning, the Buddhists might express it as nmade,' or 'unborn,' and this is a qual inherent in shibusa, one may say. The n priests frequently asked questions like: What is the lotus blossom before it nerges from the water?' or 'What is an d mirror before it is shined?' No matter hat your concept of beauty may be, the eaning is profound. In Japanese brush inting, a great deal of blank space is equently left by the artist—this can also called an expression of the search for meaningfulness. Also, when people are greatly impressed by the reverberation of an oriental bell, we can say that their spirits are enticed by the world of limitless, endless meaningfulness. The excess space in a painting and the after-reverberation of the bell are the meaningfulness. At any rate, if this quality is lacking, it falls into the category of the superficial and the shallow, and therefore is remote from shibusa. So, this 'implicitness' is an important element of shibusa.

"The third quality is modesty or humility. It can be considered the practice of desisting from constant self-assertion or the habit of not leaving traces of oneself. In the Zen phrase, 'one does not impress his own personality on his craftsmanship,' and here one can see the hallmark of shibusa. This quality of modesty, logically, does not flaunt beauty on the outside, therefore it has close connection with the previously-mentioned 'implicitness.' This is the quality of silence about oneself and therefore the following:

"Fourth quality—silence—is also involved. Or, perhaps 'tranquility' is more suitable. The tea ceremony experts always emphasized tranquility, but this tranquility always contained the idea of silence. Loudness stopped, and quiet existed. Loudness and shibusa are irreconcilable. Therefore, tranquility is one of the basic qualities of shibusa. Here the oriental character becomes more and more rich; the ultimate tranquility, the purport of the Buddhist concept of Nirvana, is suggested. This is perhaps the most profound hallmark of shibusa. To put it simply, it is long-term serenity, quiet, and tranquility. Poets often sing of the state of loneliness and of autumn evenings, and this sort of quality is also seen in shibusa. When tea ceremony devotees speak of plants dying in the cold, they are not speaking floridly—but are actually mourning the tranquility destroyed by various involvements of the spirit (with material things). Shibusa embodies the spirit which tells of the approach of the end of various inner conflicts. In English, 'silence,' or perhaps 'composure,' 'sobriety,' or 'calmness' describe this aspect.

"The fifth quality is naturalness, or inevitability. To put it simply, it connotes a lack of artifice—a spontaneity. True shibusa never arises by design or intention. If intention or design is exposed, we lose serenity thereby, we tend toward loudness, and depart from shibusa. A shibui object, in this light, is born, not made. There is a famous saying by the tea ceremony experts that: 'to become rusty is all right, to make something rusty is no good.' The Zen Priest Rinzai said: 'Do not respect the making of things.' And in shibusa can be seen the purport of uneventfulness, of the loss of tranquility which comes with the making of things.

"If one thinks thus, it is logical to make uneventfulness, or normalcy, the sixth quality. This quality leads shibusa to spontaneity and to health. Shibusa is far removed from sickness and abnormality; rather it is deeply involved with normality. Therefore, shibusa has intimate contact with the usual, the commonplace. Perhaps because of this, shibusa is seen a great deal in folk craft. If one looks at the tea utensils chosen by the tea-ceremony men of old, many were of folk-craft origin, commonly-used utensils. This fact should be given due notice. The ido, a type of bowl much favored by the tea-ceremony people, is a good example of this. To put it another way, it is difficult to preserve shibusa in the luxurious equipment of the aristocracy. The formation of a natural relationship between simplicity, the first quality of shibusa mentioned above, and folk craft, can be understood here as a logical result.

"The seventh quality, flowing automatically from naturalness, is coarseness, or roughness, and it can be said that it frequently appears in shibusa. Natural objects, not being man-made, keep the human being in the background, and nature appears on the surface; in this the form of shibusa is often seen. A type of pottery beloved by the tea-ceremony men appeared without glaze in its natural state, and this can be called a most spectacular form of shibusa. This is because the finish was occasionally a gaudy covering, and so removing it and leaving the pottery in the natural state was a logical way to display shibusa.

"This is not seen much in the West, but when the Japanese, who are devoted to the tea ceremony, see porcelain, they look immediately at the bottom because there they can see a place which has not been glazed. There they can see most clearly and feel most simply and plainly the strength of what we call shibusa. One can say that the tea-ceremony experts revered the ido type of bowl, which was deliberately marked by a rough natural streak, just because of this.

"In today's language, one can even call this roughness an imperfection, and this imperfection as inherent in shibusa. The cracks and distortions which frequently appeared in tea (Please turn to page 130)

We invite you to enter a new dimension: shibui

By ELIZABETH GORDON, E

Add the word shibui to your beauty vocabulary and you'll add new depths of understanding

● On June 10, 1960, in the New York Herald Tribune, Walter Kerr, the drama critic, wrote these words: "When I made the acquaintance of the Grand Kabuki, a week ago, I was struck by what seemed to me an odd principle of stage decoration. In the background, and in sizable proportions, scream bold concentrations of primary colors: flaring draperies in green and red stripes, swelling and dipping landscapes in hues to put your eyes out.

"Against these declarations of visual independence move the actors, often robed in the palest of pastels. What is odd about this tug-of-war is that you look at the pastels. The big splashes wear themselves out somehow, and you are left with your attention glued to a figure in a decidedly retiring shade of blue."

Mr. Kerr was experiencing what is held to be a basic aesthetic truth in ancient and modern Japan: that the less powerful thing may be the more effective thing.

This general idea, about the power of quietness and understatement, is the core of Japan's approach to beauty. Their words for this are shibusa (a noun) and shibui (the adjective). They are words so big and so deep they are hard to translate into English. But they are not hard to understand, for the majority of Japan's 84 million population understands.

To grasp the idea of shibui is to possess the best that Japan has to offer, culturally speaking. When you understand shibui, you will see things you missed before. You will develop new delicate perceptions and learn to see the whole of a thing, instead of just a part or several parts.

Shibui is the deepest beauty word in the world. It applies to a severe exquisiteness that is way beyond mere prettiness. It is serviceable to all peoples to use to measure, quite plainly and easily, the degree of profound lasting beauty.

Translated literally, shibui means puckery and astringent, as a fruit may have a slightly acid flavor (such as a persimmon or a grapefruit). It also means simple yet refined—restraint with many nuances.

These literal translations hardly begin to explain. But they are a beginning. Trying to understand shibui, so you can use it as a standard, a criteria, and a goal, is worth while, for you will find your grasp of it grows organically like a tree. We give it so much space here (20 pages), because we have had so much pleasure pursuing an understanding of it, and reaped so many rewards since we began to comprehend it. Understanding what it is, as well as what it isn't, gave us a new set of words and values for thinking about all kinds of beauty. It has sharpened our judgment.

One leading aesthetician in Japan, Dr. Soetsu Yanagi, puts it this way: "The world abounds with different aspects of beauty. The lovely, the powerful, the gay, the smart —all belong to the beautiful. Each person, according to his disposition and environment, will feel a special affinity to one or another aspect. But when his taste grows more refined, he will necessarily arrive at a beauty which is shibui. Many a term serves to denote the secret of beauty, but this is the final word."

Shibui can apply to objects, to personal dress, to the manner of conducting oneself, to garden design, to the cooking and presenting of food—in fact to all phases of living. It can be demonstrated in shape, color, sound, involving all five senses.

Shibui describes a profound, unassuming, quiet feeling. A shibui thing (or person) is unobtrusive and unostentatious. It may have hidden attainments, but they not paraded or displayed. An object shibusa is simple in form, and this sim ity must have been arrived at with economy of means. It is like the makir something out of eight parts when you ten parts available to use. This means had a mastery of the problem, the mate and the methods. A complicated or trived thing could never be shibui.

Obviously then, this direct simpl must derive from the nature of the mate It must be a knowing exploitation of material's inherent capabilities. When is done, a naturalness results, which se normal, wholesome, and healthy.

A shibui thing is far more than pr Prettiness is superficial—beauty-on-the face—"skin-deep" we'd say. So sh means beautiful with a lot more to it prettiness. Interestingness is consid more necessary than prettiness. It have elements which make you want to amine it, study it, to look again and ag It must not reveal itself all at once.

Shibui is against high-style. You d notice a shibui object at first, where high-style thing is supposed to get at tion at first glance. The Japanese word high-style is iki (pronounced ee-kee). chic, smart, stylish, à la mode thing person) could not be shibui. These are lasting and permanent qualities, and their very nature are fleeting. Shibusa beauty so great that time and chang social values could not dim it.

Shibui has nothing to do with corr ness or properness in taste. It is not navy blue suit with white gloves and wh hat. That is an obvious formula, and the fore cannot be interesting. True, it sober and sedate and unobtrusive, but d When soberness, sedateness and dulln occur together, the Japanese call it j (pronounced jee-mee). Shibui is sol sedate. (Text continues on page

Jimi (pronounced jee-mee) means sober, sedate, unobtrusive, proper, and correct; so therefore dull. If patterned, it is regular, small-scaled, obvious, and therefore without character or depth. Most Japanese strive for shibui but 40 per cent miss and achieve only jimi, since shibui requires greater understanding. They "get the words but not the tune."

and unobtrusive—but always interesting.

This requirement of interestingness—within the framework of simplicity—is quite a challenge. For most things that are simple reveal themselves at first glance. And if there is something there that requires a second look, the thing is usually complicated and contrived.

Simplicity and interestingness begin to emerge as highly important elements of shibusa. A thing possessing the shibui quality does not show everything it has. But because more is there, the object has a Presence, an Authoritativeness which you may only sense the first time you look. It beckons you to look deeper, to study it, to search for its hidden qualities.

There is still another quality that must be present in shibusa. It must have intrinsic good quality. The shoddy, the sleazy, the poorly crafted can never be shibui. So shibui objects always have craftsmanship, intelligence of design, an understanding of the material of which they are made, and imagination in the application of all these. The essence has been made to count. You might call it intrinsic goodness, delivered from the hands of somebody who understands what he is doing and with what he is working.

As a result, shibui things have a depth of character, and there is some solid inner reason for their appearance. The object that possesses shibusa is pregnant with meaning—intrinsic meaningfulness.

Shibui This pale green kimono, shown in the pictures above and at the left, is a perfect example of the understatement and inconspicuousness inherent in a shibui object. But the tiny decorations, seen close-up (see color), reveal little masterpieces of painting and embroidery. Thus a thing can be beautiful without being obvious.

As someone in Japan put it: "Shibusa is like an iceberg. You see only 20 per cent of it, but 80 per cent is hidden beneath the surface, but you feel it is there." Or put it another way: The shibui thing has a look of inevitability and spontaneity, as though it could not possibly have been any other way. It looks effortless, with nothing left wanting, yet nothing is superfluous. Its look should convey tranquility and serenity. Nothing self-conscious could ever be shibui.

One way the Japanese achieve this interestingness is via the unfinished statement—the incompleted pattern, the fragmented motif, the hint which you are supposed to complete with your own imagination. The great Japanese screens, scrolls, and fusuma generally portray just a portion of a tree, a flower, a fence, a waterfall, a mountain. Showing the whole of it would be too obvious. Leaving nothing to the imagination is rather insulting. They use a minimum of "discussion" in their designing to get across the point they want to make. It is understatement, rather than elaboration. So shibui things give the feeling of sparseness, even "monkish restraint," but upon closer examination you find a wealth of power and discipline and unspoken know-how.

This leaving of something unfinished or unsaid applies even to the highly popular poetry form, the haiku, a 17-syllable form which depends for its effect on the power of suggestion and starting trains of thought and emotion (see discussion, pages 84-85).

There is another important ingredient of shibusa which must be mentioned and understood. It is love of imperfection, of the irregular, of the worn or hoary, of rustiness. We have this attitude in Western culture only in connection with antiques, where we consider attractive the patina that comes with age. The love of imperfection as a measure of perfection in pottery and other forms of art and in nature is very old with the Japanese. You might call it a form of aesthetic and poetic melancholy, and is evoked by such things as the rust on the iron kettle, the lichens on the rocks, the fallen blossom, the moon obscured by mist, the withered branch on a living tree. (The Japanese words for this pleasant melancholy are sabi and wabi.)

Finding perfection in imperfection leads to the liking of soft, faded colors, crazing in lacquer, wavering unfinished lines in carving, weathered colors in wood, asymmetric placement of pattern, dullness instead of shininess: in short, the look that comes to a thing after long but loving use. Briefly, a mechanically perfect thing cannot be shibui. It should not look new, even though it may be new. It should not be slick or shiny, though tiny flecks of shininess can add interest to a surface. It should have the richness or irregularity time bestows.

You may be asking yourself if, in Western civilization, there are parallels, things that could qualify as being shibui. Yes indeed. Shakespeare (aside from the slapstick) is shibui. Walt Whitman is shibui (whereas Longfellow is not). Bach and Beethoven are shibui, for you can count on finding more and more in them every time you listen. (Ravel and Stravinsky can be said to be less shibui.) In modern fashion, Mainbocher clothes are shibui, whereas most recent Paris clothes are not.

In summary, shibusa is conservatism—the seriously good thing that conveys serenity and remains rewarding long after you have tired of the clever, the striking, the novel. But shibusa leaves more room for originality than do correctness and what is commonly called "good taste."

Very few modern things can be said to be shibui. Modern design is too new a point of view to have developed the depths necessary for shibusa. Anyway, the modern movement has put too high a value on the machine-made look. Shibusa is humanistic and naturalistic, and the opposite of mechanistic. For this reason, it has nothing whatever to do with the "less is more" thinking of Bauhaus and "The International Style." Shibusa is organic simplicity producing richness. It is not denial and austerity, for it is developed to the hilt.

Rather, it is mastery and a sense of rightness (so they put the effort where it counts the most). This leads to exquisite perfection. Consequently, being close to nature, it has nothing to do with abstractions.

Shibusa's life span in Japan may be nearing its close, as the grosser forms of Westernization sweep the country. We hope not, but at least there will be artifacts, poems, music, and gardens from the last thousand years to document the concept.

We are glad we saw it while it was still a living, operating way of life. Perhaps, before it disappears in Japan, we can make it our own—as we have assimilated other foreign concepts and "Americanized" them.

The natural aging of wood has an appeal that transcends cultural boundaries. We in America appreciate the beauty of weathered barn siding and the soft patina of worn paneling or furniture. But to the Japanese the aging process adds a philosophical dimension—the dignity and pathos that reveals man's own mortality. At the left are floor boards at Katsura Palace. Years of footsteps have worn away the softwood emphasizing the hardwood grain pattern. Above, wood of a fence has been deliberately aged by fire, burned wood being brushed away.

The Bloom of Time called wabi and sabi

■ To understand shibui well enough so you could make a shibui color scheme or compose a shibui accessory grouping on a shelf, you need to understand about sabi and wabi.

The sabi concept is not altogether strange for us, since we like the patina that we find on antiques—the marks that wear and tear and time leave in a totally random way on objects. This patina of age is thought to produce richness. And many manufacturers of new traditional furniture try to reproduce it in the factory. (They call it a "distress finish.")

Sabi means rusty, tarnished, or lonely. Wabi means desolate, forlorn, abandoned. In general, they describe the pleasing effect of melancholy repose. The Japanese have a saying: "Time is kind to things, but unkind to man."

We Westerners tend to shrink from these as words of praise. Yet we talk about something being "beautifully aged." And the more experienced people in our Western world turn away from shiny newness.

So we "get" part of this idea: that shibui means the opposite of smooth, regular perfection, or mechanical perfection. But there are depths here that are beyond us, unless we reach for them. And the literal translations of the words are not too helpful.

Professor Tonomura, curator of the Craft Museum in Kurashiki, has explained it well. He said, "Wabi means humble—humble by choice, not by necessity. It means normal, wholesome, and healthy—no overdoing. In design it means nothing is over-emphasized or extravagant or exaggerated. Wabi is the helpless feeling you have while you are waiting for your lover to come. Nothing is more humble than that."

The humility in wabi, the hint of sadness in the recognition of perfection in any human achievement, springs from the knowledge that with the bloom of time comes the first embrace of oblivion.

If a garden has sabi, it has a tranquil and serene atmosphere. It has sabi because it looks as if nature had taken it from the gardener, as if time itself had removed all traces of the care and effort that went into making it. The visitor who opens its gate has the almost magical experience of entering a world other than his own, one in which time seems to stand still, frozen in that moment between the achievement of perfection and the beginning of decline and decay.

A lonely rock in a sea of raked gravel epitomizes the wabi aspect of shibui. Even though it is touched with sadness, the scene is beautiful to the Japanese, who may feel: "Yes, it is sad. But it is true. I have known loneliness too."

The fallen petals of flowers lie outlined on carefully-raked sand. Silhouetted strikingly thus, they carry a pleasurable poignancy about the fleeting nature of life. The symbol of the blossom occurs again and again in Japan.

The point is that, where there is sabi, the clocks of everyday do not run and the metronome of anxiety does not set the pace.

The idea behind sabi has less to do with the deterioration of things from a state of perfection than it has to do with ripening, maturing, and acquiring a patina that can only come with time. The sabi look is produced by the natural progression of events, the relentless march of time.

The thing or the place that has sabi has acquired the bloom that time lends to some things for a while, before it destroys them (a thing we call patina and unquestioningly appreciate).

The wounds and abrasions these things have suffered since their makers abandoned them have, in time, given them a dignity and a pathos they certainly did not possess in the first place.

The lovely patina of age and antiquity develops best in natural materials: unpainted wood, woven straw and grasses, bark, stones that become covered with lichens, twig fences, bamboo.

Time carries all men away and sooner or later destroys all their works. The Japanese love those things that carry the burden of their years gracefully and with dignity, because they seem to show men how to come to terms with their tragic and incomprehensible destiny: finite beings in an infinite universe, creatures of time with a knowledge of eternity.

By allowing the carefully controlled checkerboard pattern to disappear gradually into a sand area, this recently designed garden takes on the sabi feeling of a centuries-old ruin. By showing the incursions of time, it makes the viewer think: "Ah, how many things have happened here."

● "Incomplete" is rarely a term of approval, but the Japanese designer has turned it into a true virtue. By leaving something unsaid, by merely suggesting what is not fully revealed, the artist invites you to complete the idea.

This involves your imagination, calls up the memory of things past, irresistibly draws your attention until you actually seem to become a part of the creative process yourself. So stimulated, you can return again and again, each time seeing something fresh and different. Thus can the "incomplete" design have the quality of sustained interest, without which an art object will soon pall.

For this reason, symmetry is avoided in Japanese design as being fatal to the stimulation of the imagination. The composition framed in the dead center or the completeness of a symmetrical pattern has a frozen finality that is lifeless. The typically relaxed compositions of the Japanese, in contrast, retain a lilt and grace. Often, a fragmentary glimpse conveys a whole scene; a few branches will portray the whole tree. In this way, the artist will persuade the beholder to share his insight into the nature of the subject rather than merely marvel at his skill in reproducing its obvious form.

This incompleteness is the crucial quality characterizing Japanese art. It is part of the special look that sets it apart from the art of other Oriental countries. Although the Japanese drew inspiration directly from their reverence and absorption of ancient Chinese culture, they escaped the influences that later affected art and design in China, where (Please turn the page)

This tray is typically Japanese in the refined simplicity of its decoration. The unsymmetrical composition and absence of unneeded detail has a vitality that could not be matched by a centered, realistic picture. Flashes of mother-of-pearl inlay lend the suggestion of motion to the vine leaves trailing down.

Hidden delights, like the inside of the box cover, below, often go along with the exquisite craftsmanship that is ever-present in Japan's fine art, although never an end in itself.

Without resorting to realism, a few graceful lines and inlaid mother-of-pearl on this lacquer box convey a real impression of waving grain in a flat decorative pattern.

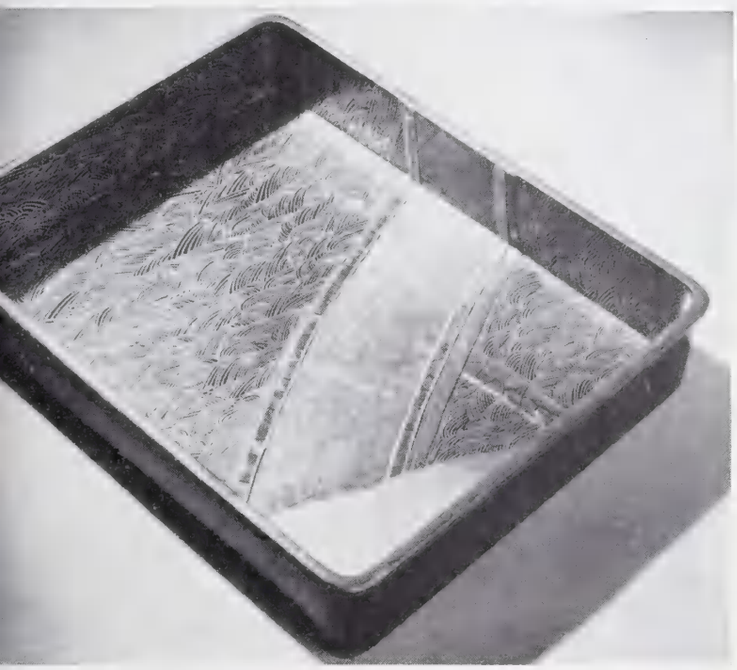
materialism (rareness, costliness, or intricacy) cam to be valued more and more. The ideals of pre-13th century China were carried on uninterrupted in Japa and developed into a purely Japanese expression i all the arts.

Behind this "Japanese look" in design is a secon important attitude: awareness of the nature of mate rials. In weaving, printing, brushwork on paper, bas ketry, lacquerwork, woodwork—even the pruning o trees and sculpting of landscape—the innate characte of the material is counted on as a definite contributin factor to be exploited as part of the artist's expression For instance, Japan's greatest painters would have ha difficulty in understanding oil painting where the tex ture of the basic canvas is completely covered instea of being brought into play as part of the composition Nor could they have understood the Greek marble that were covered with paint.

In Japan, where the mind and the emotions of ma were not divorced from the natural scene, a specia atmosphere of appreciation encouraged a more an more highly developed artistic expression. For cen turies the Japanese considered aesthetic nourishmen as vital as food. For such a sensitive audience, artist could omit spelling out the obvious and tedious details What may appear to us at first glance as restrain and simplicity in composition and content is really bold directness, free of irrelevant details,

"Stylized" and "conventionalized" are not the righ words for this subtle imagery. Both imply the simpli fication or translation of outward form. The Japanese expression is not simplification for its own sake bu an effort to go beyond realism to interpret a deepe understanding of the subject than mere outward form can convey. This was done by the greatest Japanese masters with a few deft lines or strokes of the brush like a few well-chosen words as compared to flowery oratory.



This cleanness accounts for the lasting freshness and vitality of Japan's decorative art. There is no uncer tainty or seeking of chance-effects, no covering-up with layer on layer of trials and errors.

The traditional Japanese house, with its close re lationship to its garden, was itself a manifestation of this aesthetic clarity. This environment, so close to nature, encouraged the (Please turn to page 123)

Here form, surface, and decoration all seem to be one thing, making this letter tray a fine illustration of Japanese art. This result could not be achieved were the five planes treated as separate surfaces for pictures. This could be called shibui.

Decoration for enrichment, instead of picture-making, is obvious in the little box above where pattern brings its five sides into one composition. Carving encircling bamboo brush holder takes into account the feel in the hand.

Letting natural materials show their own nature is an important element in a shibui syndrome. Letting the grain count importantly as part of the design is illustrated in these soup bowls and tray. Pegs holding wood to lacquer are gold—a good illustration of the tiny flecks of glitter that occur in dull, matte-finish surroundings. This is one of the few examples of what might be called "modern shibui." Most modern design has no depth of interest.

The Shibui Syndrome

—easy-to-live-with beauty

● When you bring things together that are to exist together and be seen together, they help each other or hurt each other. They add up to either a favorable syndrome or an unfavorable one. Usually the results add up to no more than a sum of the parts.

What all of us hope for, whether we are furnishing a room or assembling a costume or setting a table, is to achieve a total whole that becomes greater than the sum of the parts. Then a kind of a magic takes over, and the whole seems wonderfully, unexplainably beautiful. Some over-all atmosphere comes into being of a higher type than should develop or be rationally accounted for by the parts.

If you understand shibusa, you have an almost foolproof formula for making the whole greater than the sum of the parts. For inherent in shibusa are quite well-formulated theories about:

—which colors and how intense
—the ratio of dark colors to light
—what kind of pattern
—the ratio of pattern to plain
—how much sparkle and glitter
—the ratio of shininess to dullness
—what kind of materials

The four color-scheme arrangements on the following two pages are fine examples of shibui syndromes. They show all the points listed above, except that there should be much higher proportions of empty, quiet, nearly-no-color space. (Our necessity was to show the fine details and textures, which meant close-up, almost life-size photography, so the empty background spaces are in smaller ratio than they should be.)

These color families all share the common quality of being dark while also being rich. They are all colors that look well in combination with natural materials: wood, reed, straw, bamboo, growing plants. None would look out of place or garish outdoors in a garden. Those used in the largest ratios are on the darkling side—sober and dignified.

Each scheme has one tiny touch of a sharp, astringent color. These tiny sharp accents enliven and give interest to what might otherwise be too dull a scheme. The more original these astringent color accents, the more shibui.

You will notice that most of the plain, unpatterned fabrics are uneven in coloration or texture. Slubbiness (which occurs when the thread is not of uniform size) gives a texture to the plainest fabrics. Those not textured have a sheen—not a (Please turn the page)

A shibui syndrome is easy to live with because it carries the aura of fine things that have mellowed with age. There is no garish newness about it, no shininess that says, "Be careful of me or I'll scratch." It is understated good quality that is trying to prove nothing, except to be satisfying to contemplate. It is the opposite of status-seeking, since it stems from your own capacity to be aware of the "thusness" of the thing or the situation, and its capacity to produce serenity in you, rather than pride in showing off.

shine. And sheen produces two shades of one color—two-toned iridescence that moves and changes, giving depth.

Where sparkle occurs, it is only in small flecks. Sparkle is in the same small ratio as the astringent color accent. The sparkle is from mother-of-pearl, gold threads, or silver foil that is crumpled and tarnished.

Pattern is used but in lesser ratios than plains. And the patterns are small in scale, recessive, and non-dominant—even though some are quite complex. The patterns may be unfinished and broken, or there may be several overlaying each other, like several melodies being developed simultaneously in a piece of music, with one being more conspicuous and audible. Some of the fabrics—even though new—have a sabi look, as though they were old, with a soft patina from wear and time.

The mottling on the copper tea kettle (left photograph, page 103) and on the bronze vase (above) makes these objects suitable accessories to be introduced into a shibui syndrome. They qualify because of their matte finish and their equivocal coloring which eludes being named. The vase above has an extra fillip—the almost-sure-to-be-missed tracery of a fish (which we had to exaggerate with lighting to make it show at all).

So you can begin to write specifications for a shibui syndrome. It is quiet in its over-all coloring, but is sparked by one or two sharp accents. It always relates to nature and natural materials. Some colors can be changeable and variable and be impossible to name. If the materials are not matte finish, they can have sheen but not shine. And there can be tiny flecks of sparkle. If textured, the texture should arise out of the nature of the materials. It means avoiding the artificial in every sense, relying instead on the natural beauty inherent in the material.

An exhibition of shibui-style objects will be held at Bonniers, 605 Madison Ave., New York, from July 19 through July 31

The Japanese are almost religiously clean about their persons and their surroundings. Their system of removing shoes before entering the house is only one reflection of this. The steaming hot bath is daily ritual, and their public baths are almost like social clubs. But all bathing isn't communal by any means. In many inns you can bathe solo in Western modesty. In true Japanese fashion, this private bath in the Doi Inn in Kyoto turns a routine activity into an aesthetic event. For, while the bather is soaking, he can enjoy a framed vista of a distant pagoda through a window deliberately placed to bring in this lovely vignette.

Journey to a Different Viewpoint

To grasp the depth of Japan's rich culture, so you can translate the best of it to your life, plan a trip beyond the pagodas and cherry blossoms

• Japan is a country where people think nothing of taking long train excursions to view the fireflies on a midsummer's night or to gaze at the first snowfall or watch the golden September moon. No one here considers it erratic if a businessman makes a hobby of flower arrangement or calligraphy or the writing of poetry.

You can nip in for a meal at a counter restaurant in Japan and come out having had an aesthetic experience, the food so sensitively related to its plates and bowls that each course is as lovely to look at as a miniature. There's poetry in the modest grace with which a Japanese woman closes a shoji, in the perfection with which all packages are wrapped, or in the artistry with which a mandarin orange is peeled.

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Astonishing variety exists within the general grammar of Japanese architectural design, as you can see if you examine these house façades. The characteristic overhanging tiled roofs, the wood fences and balustrades, and the strong vertical lines are all here, but interpreted differently in each individual building.

From early childhood, the Japanese are preoccupied with art. The sketching expedition is a popular pastime, and it is not unusual to see school children whiling away an afternoon with pad and brush—not in organized groups, but independently for their own pleasure. Not every Japanese is an artist, of course, but most have uncommonly sensitive art appreciation.

This sensibility, this restrained lyricism, which threads its way through the whole tapestry of Japanese life, has its roots deep in the past. When our Western European ancestors were still nomadic tribes, the Japanese were communicating with each other in poetry—as they still do. (See our discussion of Japan's popular haiku poetry on pages 84-85). And how significant it is that even in those early times, their literary expression invariably dealt with nature, the wonder of the changing seasons, and the transience of life and human love. The tradition of the aesthetic approach seems so inbred in the Japanese as to be almost instinctive. In any case, it is one of the reasons we have yet to meet a sentient Westerner who hasn't been utterly charmed by the delicacy and differentness of Japan.

But the major differentness is not a mystical one. It's the simple fact that this civilization is geared to sitting on the floor. This means you must literally readjust your point of view and your physical movements, and you discover that the world is indeed a different-seeming place when you sit, eat, and sleep on the floor. But most importantly, for the first time you will be seeing the architecture, furnishings, and art of Japan in their true perspective, as they were designed to be experienced, from floor level.

Yet, for all the intriguing differentness you will meet, there is no place where, as an aware alive American traveler, you can reap richer rewards in ideas and objects with which to improve the quality of your living at home.

Here is a sophisticated and elegant culture that has been developing for 2,000 years. It is a distillation of the high civilizations of ancient China and Korea, shaped by Shintoism, Buddhism, and (Please turn the page)

Privacy and tranquility are what the Japanese themselves seek on their excursions into the country. They may go to an inn, like this one on Lake Biwa, and hire a private room or pavilion for a few hours so that they can picnic or take a nap in an atmosphere close to natural beauty. A Western traveler could do the same.

A room this large could accommodate many diners, yet it is a rather typically-sized private dining room in a good restaurant. Since all dining rooms are private, you can understand why the keepers of the best restaurants are more likely to give you reservations if your party is a large one. Five or six is a good number.

Confucianism, philosophies that couldn't be more bewildering to most Western minds. Yet out of these alien-seeming roots has come a practice of living for and with beauty that has always been unfailingly appealing to Occidental tastes.

At this very moment Japanese design is enjoying its third world-wide "boom" in 100 years. So this is a particularly propitious time to see the arts and artifacts of Japan in their own background, to sharpen your own powers of discrimination so that you can recognize and separate the abiding, great beauty that is native to Japan from the ephemeral novelties (called exports) that are often presented to the world as Japan's best. And you can have such a good time doing it!

Until you go to see for yourself, you may not realize how decidedly Japan has been influencing the architecture, landscaping, and home furnishing design of the West since 1853 when Commodore Perry "reopened" Japan to the world. In antique Japanese prints and screen paintings, you will recognize what the early French Impressionists borrowed and made characteristic of early modern art. And you will be astonished to see how much of the traditional Japanese house has already been transplanted into modern architecture—the close tie between indoors and outdoors, the lack of clutter, the use of natural materials for the intrinsic beauty of their color or texture.

But to savor this side of Japan calls for a quite different travel approach than you'd use, say, in visiting Europe. In Europe a tourist can get some inkling of the real life of a country by observing its public places and street scenes.

But Japan does not live as outwardly as the West. Its streets, after the first impact of novelty, and except for their exotic after-dark glow when the shop lanterns and the policemen's lanterns are lit, are more drab than intriguing. They are innocent of the large vistas that often lend color to streets in Europe or South America. For the Japanese disdain large views, preferring more intimate vignettes—a pine bough framed in a window, say—and their cities give no hint of the beauty you can't see. Streets are generally lined with non-committal brown wood façades, stained this color by persimmon juice. But it is beyond these façades that the real Japan reveals itself in delightful living quarters and gardens hidden from the street.

That's where you want to get—behind the scenes—so you should plan your travels accordingly. And to understand what you'll find, you should plan to steep yourself as deeply in Japanese ways as a traveling foreigner can—eating, sleeping, living Japanese. (Please turn to page 126) saturated fats, high in minerals (such as calcium and phosphorus) and trace elements, and moderately high in Vitamins A and C. Assuming you would blend Japanese foods with our American diet (which is high in proteins, high in Vitamin C, assuming you do what you should about citrus), you would have an ideal way to lower your total intake of calories and fats while raising the intake of the wanted nutrients. If we are all at least 20 pounds overweight, as the new figures from the actuaries say we are, here is the answer to how to eat agreeably and heartily while getting our weight down to where it ought to be.

In the year since our first trip to Japan we have been learning to cook Japanese. I personally cook Japanese two to five times every week. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL will be publishing a series on Japanese cooking, stemming from our experiences. For even if you add only a few Japanese tricks to your present repertoire you would be the richer.

Two of the best cookbooks are published in English. One is Japanese Food, published in Honolulu by a women's organization. It can be bought by mail from the International Institute of Hawaii, 468 Hotel Street, Honolulu. Price, $3.75 postage paid. The other is Typical Japanese Cooking, by Tomi Egami, the Fannie Farmer of Japan. Her book is filled with how-to-do-it drawings and gorgeous color photographs showing how to arrange and serve. Price: $6.25 postpaid from International Publications service, 507 Fifth Ave., New York 17. (Or, with food orders, from Oriental Food Shop, address below.)

The cornerstone of Japanese cooking is a basic soup stock made of dried bonito (katsuobushi) and dried kelp (kombu). It is cooked quickly, strained to be completely clear. It can be used as soup with the addition of any number of pretty garnishes. Or it can be used as the cooking stock of numberless other foods. This basic stock, called dashi, is the palest amber in color and delicate in taste, with no taste of the sea about it. When first meeting it, most Americans think it is a weak chicken broth skimmed of its fat. Used to cook other things, dashi imparts an almost undiscernible flavor that is better than if plain water were used. These dried products of the sea are loaded with mineral trace elements plus calcium and phosphorus, all of which are being more and more highly rated by nutritionists.

Another basic requirement for Japanese cooking is the dipping sauces, all of which revolve around soy sauce. There are four fine ones: soy and lemon juice (half and half) garnished with finely chopped scallions; soy with grated white radish; soy with grated fresh ginger; and soy garnished with flakes of dried bonito.

Since all Japanese foods are cut in small, bite-size pieces, and since the majority of things are cooked quickly in dashi with no other seasoning, these dipping sauces are clearly crucial, for the foods would be too pale-flavored without them. Individual servings of dipping sauces are provided each person, so you can adjust how much sauce you get on each bite, seasoning up or down at will.

A grinding-mashing bowl, better than a mortar and pestle, is the suribachi. It macerates hard things like sesame seeds, almonds into a paste. Six-inch size, with pestle, $3. A grater for grating ginger and radish costs 85c. Order by mail from Oriental Food Shop, 1302 Amsterdam Ave., N.Y.C.

Dipping sauces are only one family of seasonings. Here is a fantastically good one based on sesame seeds. It could be used on lightly cooked or slivered raw vegetables (either hot or cold).

Sesame seed paste is made by macerating sesame seeds in a Japanese mortar and pestle (called a suribachi) which is a very effective grinding-mashing bowl. Its inside is serrated in tiny ridges. A pestle of hard wood is the other half of this kitchen tool. Black sesame seeds give a better flavor. If you can't buy black sesame, you can make black ones out of white by parching them in a hot iron skillet until they jump. (Stir while they are parching.)

Grind two tablespoons of sesame seeds to a paste. It takes about a minute. Add two tablespoons soy sauce, two tablespoons of sesame oil, two tablespoons mirin (a sweet Japanese wine) or sherry. This will have a viscous, semi-liquid consistency. Toss your vegetables in this till they are thoroughly coated. Wonderful on cold string beans, carrot slices, or spinach shreds.

Making the acquaintance of sesame seed oil should be high on your list of must-do's. It can be used to make salad dressings, to deep-fat fry in, to marinate in. It is one of the most pleasantly fragrant oils imaginable, smelling nutty and almost meaty.

Another central foodstuff is miso. We have no counterpart whatever for miso. It is fermented rice and soy beans. It is highly nutritious and is used in hundreds of ways. There are two types—white and red. Most Americans will like the white type best perhaps.

One good recipe for an early experience with miso is in soup.

Basic Miso Soup
(Serves six)

3 cups water
¼ cup dried shrimps

Boil together for 20 minutes and then strain. To this stock add a half cup strained miso. Bring to a boil and serve immediately, garnished with chopped scallions.

This may be varied by adding canned clams, oysters, fish. The basic stock may be varied by adding sliced turnips, eggplant, shredded cabbage or spinach. Add to the stock before adding miso.

Commercial souvenirs, the kind of objects business firms give away, are frequently so handsome you'd be happy to buy them. They have to be of high design caliber to appeal to the public taste. Above, JAL's collection: a silk damask passport case, a plastic brief case, a fan, menus, matches.

to the counter restaurant owner and you discover that one of his major preoccupations is the design quality of his tableware. He chooses it as carefully as a violinist chooses his bow—not only because he himself is looking for perfection, but because his clientele will know the difference.

No Western lady of fashion ever gave more critical scrutiny to another lady's dress than a Japanese businessman gives to the bowls and dishes set before him in a restaurant. And if you observe the careful, thoughtful demeanor of a Japanese woman selecting chopstick holders, you realize why design in Japan has got to be good to meet the exacting standards of this knowledgeable audience.

It is interesting to note that the best Western design today—the Scandinavian—springs out of the same sort of awareness on the part of the public. Japanese and Scandinavian design traditions differ, of course, but there is a hard core of similarity in that both peoples are given to perfectionism, and out of their own experience, they are valid critics of the work of others.

But, we daresay, they are not the only people in the world gifted with the talent to surround their daily lives with beauty. Time, tradition, and a willingness to develop the potential depths of awareness that lie in all of us have brought about the flowering of these highly aesthetic cultures. And this is something for Americans to think about as our own indigenous culture asserts itself, and we confront the problem of our standards.

IOW ARCHITECTURE CAN REVEAL "THE CORE OF THINGS"

The experience of Katsura does ot begin immediately. The lessons offers us in economy of design, elicacy of detail, restraint in decration, and merging of house with ndscape do not reveal themselves superficial inspection. In fact, he first impression of Katsura alace is one of severe austerity. radually, as you examine the awless joints, the refined hardare, the intricate storage soluons, as you realize the many fascinating surface textures that come to life in the ever-changing light, and as you see the gardens compose and recompose into new vistas with each new view, you begin to understand how environment and structure can reveal the nature of man and his needs.

Maraini describes his visit to Katsura: "The villa is a single-story wooden building, raised from the ground on piles a good three feet high, and with a roof of tiny wooden shingles, arranged with great care to form a rough, slightly curved surface. The floors are covered with tatami, the doors are of thin wood and paper. Fortunately the guide left us to our own devices, for which we were grateful; generally parties are taken round like sheep, totally unable to breathe the spirit of the place; and this is one of the places in which there is, perhaps, very little to see, but a great deal to breathe in. My impression is that it is only by staying there for a considerable time, perhaps by sleeping there, that you begin to have the feel of the place. It is like the high mountains; unless you have slept among them you know them only as a tourist.

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER

The approach to the moon-viewing platform at Katsura is on these gradually rising stones, placed so artfully that you hardly realize they do actually form a walk. Below, a plan of the Katsura enclosure shows the variety of interest created within what is only a seven-acre area.

"NOW, as there was no one to hurry us, we could squat on the tatami where we pleased; this was most important, because Japanese architecture is designed to be seen and appreciated by a man squatting on the floor in the position of meditation. From this level, views and the perspectives which otherwise seem small, cold, out of balance, become warm and welcoming, and made to the measure of man. As soon as we squatted, we saw 'the garden entering the house'; the fusion between interior and exterior was perfect. Every tree, every stone, every ripple on the pond, was thought of in terms of how it would look from inside the house; similarly, the house was designed so that it appeared in perspective from wherever it was looked at. You are immediately struck by the totally irregular plan of the building; the effect is as if it had happened by chance. But then you see that it is an elegant avoidance of symmetry, that it respects every slight undulation of the soil, that it models itself on nature.

"The Katsura villa was the starting-point of influences which profoundly affected the subsequent development of Japanese architecture, and laid the foundations for the taste which excites so much admiration at the present day among the architects and interior decorators of the world. It is a work of superb purity and a subtle allusive beauty. There is no yielding to the temptations of pomposity, grandeur, superficiality; instead there is a heroic self-discipline, a rejection of all superfluities; man stands purified in front of nature purified, so that both may merge and participate in ultimate being, the great secret."

spirit of shibui, but in so far as it is massive it is not.

Chinese influences have often introduced the idea of monumentality and mass into Japan, but the Japanese have never developed a taste for the massive and impressive. Shibui is against these qualities, which violate the human scale. The six-foot module of the Japanese house relates to the height of a finely built man, and the governing idea of shibui is the idea of man in a harmonious relationship with nature.

THE Japanese idea of what makes a room or a house a pleasant place to be in is inseparable from the larger question of man's place in nature. So the problem of the exact nature of shibui is as much a philosophical as it is an aesthetic question. Much Western thinking is ruled by a division of categories between the material and the spiritual. But the Japanese recognize no distinction, even though they are a deeply religious people.

The aboriginal faith of Japan is Shinto, the religion that gives the country one of its names as the land of eight million gods. The number is not to be understood literally; it is used much as we use the word myriad to mean an uncountable number. The Shinto gods are called Kami, and they are omnipresent. Anything recognizable as a thing has its Kami, and the Kami might be called the thing's identity, or the essence that distinguishes it from every other thing and any other thing. According to Shinto philosophy, this essence is a divine vital force, which is manifested as the particularity of individuality of everything there is on the face of the earth. This conception leads the Japanese to approach life with a reverent spirit, since the idea means that they are in contact with the divine even when they are performing the most routine and humdrum tasks.

Every Japanese house that is truly Japanese contains altars at which ceremonies of homage to life are made daily as a matter of household routine. These deeply moving observances have in some cases been mistaken for ancestor worship by Westerners, but this is a confusion. The ancestors are not being treated as existing spirits with power to affect the fortunes of the living for good or ill. They are being accorded respect and reverence as the channels by which the divine spirit has been brought down to the living, just as children in Japan are given uniquely sympathetic and careful treatment by their elders, as the bearers who will take the spark of the divine spirit into the future.

The deeply ritualistic character of Japanese life becomes apparent when the visitor finds himself a witness at a Shinto ceremony. On such an occasion he finds that the forms of worship at the shrine are the forms of good manners in the home. This linkage accounts for the immediately obvious relationship between the architecture of Japanese palaces, shrines, and houses. They are all ultimately concerned with the same dedicated purpose of rendering due respect.

The somewhat grave and serious idea of shibui took shape when the two strands of Shinto and Buddhism were being bound together a long time ago in the crucial formative centuries of Japanese culture. To understand modern Japan we must remember what it is made of: that the aboriginal Shinto culture of Japan was swamped by Chinese influence in the 7th Century, and by the 10th Century an extremely elegant, artificial, and decadent culture of a predominantly Buddhist character ruled matters of taste, art, and manners.

In this troubled period, lasting from about 1100 A.D. to about 1350 A.D., a new, characteristically-Japanese society was formed with Zen as its basic philosophy.

The new order was the creation of a warrior class that had come to the surface and achieved power in the time of troubles, and Zen reflects this stratum. Zen is a practical mysticism that stresses self-discipline, self-control, and the recognition of things as they are, and strongly condemns the intellectualism and the over-refinement of the old Chinese culture. In effect it is the mental attitude of the tough-minded, active warrior who had to keep his mind clear and concentrated for the rapid decisions needed in combat.

THE Zen monks with their fierce devotion to truth and their Spartan discipline were spiritual warriors, and they developed a severe and simple architecture for the buildings in which they lived their dedicated lives. At the same time, the warrior class developed a domestic architecture that reflected its function—that of housing the head of a fighting group and his men, who were ready to stand to arms at all times. The style appropriate to such a function is naturally a compound of the strong, the practical, and the economical. Between the warriors and the Zen monks the shoin style of architecture was developed. It was and it remains to this day the most powerful influence on the design of the Japanese house. Its characteristics are formality, precision, freedom from clutter, and directness. My favorite shoin building is the Nanzenji-Hojo at Kyoto, though the Kaikakuji Shoshinden in the same city runs it a close second. These buildings combine great simplicity with a certain splendor, and they always balance the austere control of their internal space by allowing vistas into gardens where, with great artifice, nature is made to appear to rule.

ONE of the leading features of the shoin style, and of all Japanese interior design after its development, is the interaction of house space with garden space. Japanese gardens are as a rule elaborately fenced or walled for privacy and thought of as outdoor rooms to extend the house. The island's climate is moist, and rainfall is distributed evenly around the year so that gardens stay green.

The contrast between the greenness outside in the roofless garden room and the colors of the interior space is a recurrent theme of Japanese decoration. Many fusuma paintings are designed with the thought that they will be completed and complemented by the close proximity of a mass of green in direct light which will filter green reflected light into the room where the painting is to be seen.

Shoin style developed an approach to room lighting which is at first antipathetic to Westerners since it places a premium on indirect sources. Japanese rooms are shadowy and almost sombre by American standards. What the Japanese like are soft modulated lighting effects, and they find direct lighting, and its sharp-edged shadows, harsh and unsympathetic.

The relatively unimpressive showing of Japanese works of art in European and American museums, where they are shown against light-colored walls in a blaze of clear light, is due to the fact that they are not meant to be seen in such conditions. They come alive in Japanese rooms where they are to be seen illuminated by light bounced off tatami or off the polished wood of veranda floors. Few Japanese paintings in Japan are ever exposed to direct sunlight except the work of modern artists.

The essence of the Japanese room is that it is filled with filtered light, modified by being passed through paper shoji, wooden lattice work, or a screen of leaves in the exterior room or court. Kirakirashii—the Japanese word for shining, brilliant, bright, flashing—is not complimentary, and kirabiyaka—which means gorgeousness, the precise opposite of shibui—is actually a word with a suggestion of condemnation about it. The root of both is kira, an old-fashioned and now little-used word, which means the shining iridescent scum, like spilled gasoline, which sometimes appears on stagnant water.

The similar word kirei, which is the standard Japanese term for beautiful, also means clean and pure and carries with it the suggestion of the qualities of fresh water from a sweet spring, limpidity and clarity. But the full glare of sunlight falling on sheets of primary color, or glinting on polished surfaces seems hard, crude, and brutal to the Japanese. Their taste is for the softened, the modified, and the hint of rich or brilliant color in concealment.

A Japanese gardener often gets a greater effect of color with a few scarlet blossoms and a variety of leaves of different sizes and different greens than a Western gardener is able to create with the free use of hundreds of brightly colored flowers arranged in masses.

The Japanese say that bright colors tire the eye and that the reserve and subtlety of greens enrich it. The flowers they love most are those that collapse soon after they have reached the perfection of full bloom and let their petals drift in their prime. Many gardens make a point of carpets of moss and lichen-covered stones placed beneath flowering trees so as to make the most of fallen petals. But the great discovery of shoin architecture was the destruction of the distinction between house space and garden space so that the garden became part of the house.

Shoin architecture and decorative style was, however, the expression of an intoxication with newfound powers. A greater serenity entered the picture as the warriors became more assured of their position as the rulers of the country. The Shinto-Buddhist synthesis produced cha-no-yu, the calm tea-making ceremonial in which the Japanese family expresses its unity with nature by making and drinking an exquisitely scented and flavored green froth that tastes like the very essence of growth and vitality.

Cha-no-yu produced in its turn a more delicate and refined style. The warriors took up the tea ceremony and developed a practice of laying aside badges of rank and honor and all weapons when they went to perform it or to take part in it. Cha-no-yu is egalitarian—all men are equals at the tea ceremony—and it is a ritual in which men admit their humble role in the scheme of things. Cha-no-yu thus modified the powerful shoin architectural style in the direction of simplicity and modesty, and gave rise to the sukiya style.

A point of transition between the two, or the birth of the new style can be seen in the almost perfect house and garden grouping called the Kahoan Shoin on the grounds of the Daikokuji in Kyoto. Outside, this building has the strength of the shoin style, but inside the tension and delicacy of the new sukiya manner. The new style, in all its purity, without any trace of the shoin force and power, was first visible in the Katsura palace (shown on the front cover and on pages 66 and 67), a superb piece of modern architecture dating from the early 17th Century.

This building gives up its secrets slowly. When I first saw it, I was inclined to dislike it because it seemed too deliberate and too contrived a work of art to be a human habitation. At the time it seemed cold and impersonal, but I realize now that this is because it is a national treasure and a historic monument, and too much institutional care has swept off some of the bloom it would have if it were more personally tended.

KATSURA has the complete logic and inevitability of very good music. No part of it could be changed without requiring adjustments to every other part, since every one of its details is an integrated part of the whole. In its simplicity it achieves the most complex effects of rhythm and relationship that architects anywhere have tried to attain. It has an unchallengeable title as one of the world's great pieces of architecture. Yet there is practically nothing there.

The Katsura palace makes no use of specially precious or remarkable material, it made no tremendous technical demands on its builders, and there are no splendors in its decoration or ornament. It is very plain, rather sparse, and its color is subdued. And yet it is deeply satisfying, and it becomes more satisfying the more one thinks about it. Like great pictures and real poems it always has more to give. One's feelings about it are in fact likely to be the exact reverse of those that are created by the striking building that catches the imagination at first sight. When the striking building's special trick or attention-getting device is mastered, it becomes a curiosity and at last a bore.

The Katsura palace, which seems to try for so little, appears dull at first, but it develops endlessly as one discovers it. It is designed in depth. This is shibui, the hidden treasure waiting for discovery, the giant's unused power, the modesty that lets the thing speak for itself, and the creation of wealth by discarding the unnecessary and the trivial.

And then, when one learns to see the Katsura palace, all the secrets of the Japanese house come forward to present themselves: its beautifully flowing and free ground-plan held together and made coherent; its every space in graceful and harmonious proportion with the rest.

ANOTHER thing about the Japanese house also manifests itself very plainly at the Katsura palace. The traditional Western house faces the outside world with designed façades, it confronts free space with enclosing walls that have openings in them. Inside are rooms set apart by walls on which decorative ornament or framed pictures are placed. Even the modern Western home that aims at fluid internal space gives wall and façade a leading role.

The Japanese house is primarily a frame supporting a roof and the walls are secondary attachments to the frame. The fusuma really allow interior space in a house to be fluid; rooms can be sealed off for privacy or opened up into the general living space with the greatest freedom. In the humid summer months all the internal walls made of fusuma, except those absolutely necessary for privacy, disappear and give way to split bamboo ones. The whole house is open from end to end, and what breezes there are can blow through it.

At such times, when one sees the framework of the house standing naked, one realizes to how great an extent the house is thought of by the Japanese in terms of enclosed space within a structure, and how little thought they give to the surfaces that are so important to us. They think in terms of the house as an organic whole. Our houses with their autonomous rooms—the dining room, the bedroom, the study—seem to them fragmentary.

I recall sitting inside this beautiful house, looking through the next room to the sunlit garden beyond it. The guard was watching us. He was a member, though a lowly one, of the Imperial household and he obviously had the view that the palace was almost too good for us. However, we were behaving quite well and he was prepared to put up with us. At that moment I found myself wondering again about the submissiveness that is part of the Japanese character, a submissiveness that is so un-American.

It occurred to me, as it often does, that the American problem is freedom.

Shibui is not really an exclusively Japanese idea; basically it is the principle of selection and elimination which is the key to the artistic process in every culture. The creation of things of lasting value and real beauty demands the most exacting of all disciplines, and real freedom of spirit comes with submission to it. The artist is not a man who does what he wants, but a man who recognizes the vital thing that must be done. This is the great lesson that the art of Japan has to teach.

Our culture is one of striving for a ruthless mastery of nature and nature's gifts, and, though our aspirations are noble, our culture might have as its symbols the bulldozer and the used-car lot. We scrape out of our way things that are in our way, and simply discard things when we are through with them. We do not respect or revere either nature or the things we make with her materials.

One of the most instructive sights in Japan is the corrosion and destruction that Westernization brings to its beauties. In this alien setting it is easy for us to see what we are unthinkingly doing to ourselves and to our children's heritage. We do what we want on the short term, and on the long term destroy what we love.

BEHIND the idea of shibui is the idea of worship and reverence for life, for all living things, for organic growth, and the natural order. If we could learn something of the balance between freedom and discipline that gives Japanese art and design its serenity, the quality of shibui, we might find a clue to lead us toward a recapture of the tranquility and harmony that our machines have stolen.

Perhaps the most important part of shibui is the idea of imperfection. Nothing that is smooth, flawless, and utterly perfect can be shibui. There must always be the reminder, for a thing to be shibui, that man has his limitations, that there are limits, and that we cannot have everything we want.

Superb detailing characteristic of Japanese architecture is seen in the infinite care with which simple joints like those above are interlocked.

The complexity of the Japanese house does not reveal itself easily. As a matter of fact, many travelers come away feeling it is very simple. It is anything but that, as this drawing of a typical interior shows. Many different materials, some in rather small pieces, have come together to produce the total effect.

ppearance of wet and dry rocks, he way daylight can be manipuated. Their habit of squeezing very bit of experience out of verything is well typified by their istening for the reverberations of struck gong. We Westerners would only hear the first bong.

The Japanese have an almost hildlike idealism that one should ind delight in everything, whether t be a cup to drink from, a comb or the hair, a fan, or the squares of fabric which they use for parcelarrying, or the graceful motion of hand. They have acquired eyes nd ears that hear so they enjoy, s Bernard Leach has expressed it. all that pertains to beauty and oetic insight in the things of the ouse—pottery, painting, calligraphy, lacquer, food, flowers, movement—human relationship itself."

They have developed a condition nd an attitude to beauty which has nade of it something to consume nd experience every hour of every lay. What Lafcadio Hearn said in 895 still seems eminently true to our HOUSE BEAUTIFUL editors in 960. He said: "The longer I dwell n Japan, the more I feel growing pon me that there are exquisite rtistic faculties and perceptions leveloped in these people of which ve can know scarcely more than ve know of unimaginable colors, nvisible to the human eye, yet roven to exist by the spectroscope. . . We are now learning aspects f life and beauties of form to which we were utterly blind."

Since HOUSE BEAUTIFUL is dedicated to the proposition that your daily life should be as meaningful and as beautiful as possible, Japan seemed to us of the utmost significance. Their non-separation of the beautiful from the practical seemed to us completely ideal. Their subtlety of discrimination was enviable, and their language for discussing beauty opened new worlds.

Their classifications of beauty intrigued us particularly. Four of their beauty words we have made our own (shibui, jimi, iki, and hade), and they have been valuable in helping us think more precisely about beauty and its many faces. (See the chart on page 120.)

One of these words, shibui (an adjective) has the highest connotations, and we devote 20 pages in this issue to its meaning. Its meaning is deep, but not too deep to be understood by everybody in Japan. (A quick translation of shibui is "a severe exquisiteness.")

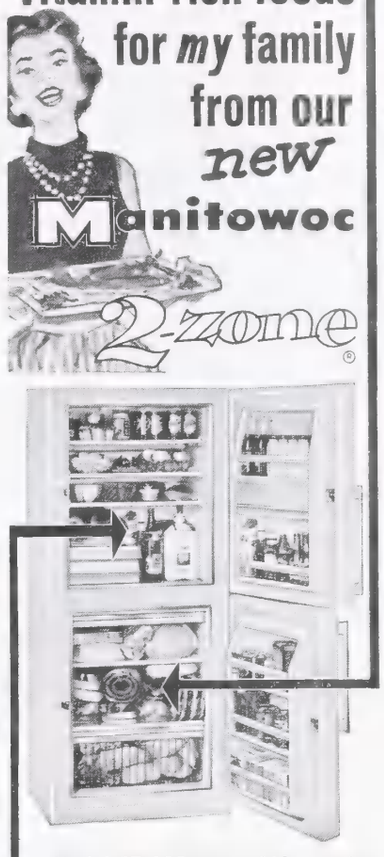
But behind this apparent simplicity lies a tremendous sophistication and complexity. Like a well-tailored suit, or an haute couture ball gown, the hidden skill and know-how does not show itself. Even the Japanese themselves are not too aware of the complexity, for it has been this way for so many centuries that they have forgotten there could be any other way. Now it is only racial memory.



Modern Japan, for all the ruthless paradoxes caused by ill-digested Westernization, still lives by an ancient aesthetic of ineffable beauty which has much of profound value to give the West, just as the West has much to give to Japan. It is through the arts of a people that we can best get to know them, for art speaks directly, transcending barriers of language, customs, and politics. Through an appreciation of Japan's art, we of the outer-directed West can come closer to an understanding of the inner-directed East. We can bridge the gap of ignorance which has so long separated our unlike cultures. As Bernard Leach has said, and as every aware traveler in the East must recognize, the very future of the world may depend upon this kind of understanding.

We are indebted to many people for their aid in helping us explore the cultural aspects of Japan that pertain to American life. It was only their depth of understanding that enabled us to dig into subjects, like shibui, which have never been discussed, except lightly, in the English language.

But we are especially indebted to Dr. Soetsu Yanagi, to Hatsuko Ashihara, to Eiko Yuasa, to Yui Kittaka, and to Seizo Tanouchi—all of whom contributed in various ways to our education and understanding.

We are also grateful to The Japan Society in New York for their immense cooperation in many areas.

The four kinds of Japanese Beauty

Hade

—bright colored
—bold patterned —exuberant in over-all effect —youthful
—gaudy

Typified by kimono of young women and young geisha. Or the red and gold shrines of Nikko. This is the "official face" Japan puts on for the world—in tourism and national publicity.

Iki

—chic
—smart
—stylish
—à la mode
—clever and sophisticated

Typified by kimono and dress of professional models, older geisha, actresses. It is the Japanese equivalent of the French word chic, which we now use.

Jimi

—sober and sedate in color
—unobtrusive
—proper, correct, therefore dull
—small, over-all patterns, regularly placed —obvious, and without character

Most Japanese strive to achieve shibui in their dress and other possessions. Probably 60 per cent achieve only jimi. Shibui takes more depth of understanding than jimi. They "get the words but not the tune," and achieve only proper correctness.

Shibui

—unobtrusive and unostentatious.
—intrinsically good (can even be rich).
—patterns not regularly placed, often unfinished, creating interesting spaces.
—simple, with an economy of line and effort. Nothing complicated could be shibui.
—must have depths worth studying, after first noticed.
—must have design character.
—must be fitting exploitation of the nature of the material and the method.
—should not be shiny or new-looking, though small touches of sparkle can be used. Even if new, object should have dull patina that comes with loving care.
—if applied to color scheme, the large areas of color should be dark, rich, and unobtrusive, but there should be a small sharp accent color somewhere—to give astringency and interest.
—the essence of controlled understatement.
—is aimed to produce tranquility.
—a feeling of modesty and humility is necessary in striving for shibui.

Shibui is the essence of Japanese culture and is considered the ultimate in taste—for all but the very young. There are two strains of it: the folk craft school of thought and the aristocratic school of thought. We Americans can encompass them both.

Japan has excellent railway service with clean, smooth-running trains that are almost frighteningly prompt. In general they put our railroad system to shame. A train trip is an enlightening experience. The cars are kept dusted throughout the journey. Japanese gentlemen make the trip in long underwear.

Jets will cut flying time almost in half, and fares may be subject to a $20 surcharge.

JAL also flies to Hong Kong, Bangkok, and Singapore, and is flying jets in joint operation with Air France from Tokyo to Hamburg and Paris, via the Polar route. JAL domestic flights within Japan link Tokyo with Osaka, Sapporo, Fukuoka, and Okinawa.

Journey to a Different Viewpoint, page 106, outlines a travel plan especially drawn up to give you, as a HOUSE BEAUTIFUL reader, an insight into Japanese life and design which can help you improve your living at home.

But Japan is unlike any other country you've ever experienced, and so to travel smoothly through its differences in language and sometimes baffling customs, you need some tips on the "mechanics" of Japanese travel.

Inside Japan

You definitely need a specialized guide for the reasons given on page 126. Rates for guides hired through the Japan Tourist Bureau are quoted as:

| | Half day | Full day |
|---|---|---|
| 1 to 4 clients | $3.31 | $4.46 |
| 5 to 9 clients | $3.92 | $5.00 |
| 10 to 14 clients | $4.46 | $5.54 |

Less than four hours is considered "half day," more than five hours is "one day."

Besides the guide's fee, you must pay for his transportation, meals, and lodging. Approximate minimum cost of guide's meals and lodging is breakfast, 60¢; lunch, 71¢; dinner, $1.30; lodging, 60¢.

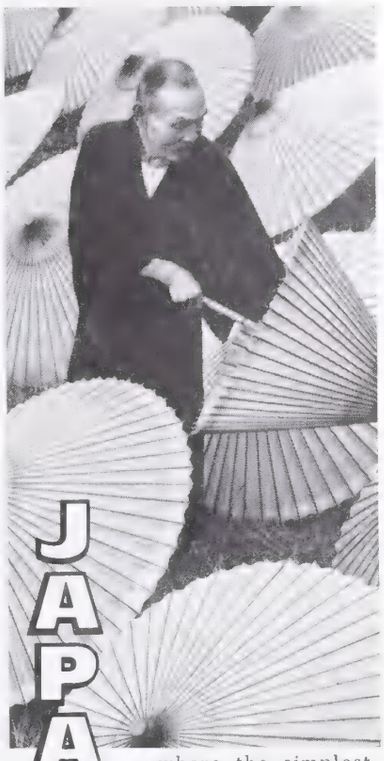
For business travelers and firms who need help in arranging appointments and conducting meetings, F. Nagashima in the Imperial Hotel in Tokyo has interpreter-guide service at rates that run about $20 a day.

Japan Travel Bureau rates for private cars for sightseeing in Tokyo are $2.23 an hour, plus 81¢ an hour waiting time. For motor trips outside Tokyo a fixed price is usually quoted. For instance, $15.20 from Tokyo to Kamakura; $27.50 from Tokyo to Hakone. Waiting time is 81¢ an hour.

Taxi rates fall into four categories, depending upon the size of the car, 60, 70, 80 and 100 yen. (100 yen equals 27¢.) Taxi drivers, usually country boys in the big city, need detailed instruction in where they're to take you. Get your guide or your hotel porter to explain. It's most important to save the name cards which Japanese exchange with you when they're introduced, because they're usually printed with their complicated addresses. The technique is to show the card to the driver. (Japan is 99 per cent literate.) Save match boxes for the same reason. Taxi drivers are not tipped except for special services.

We would discourage drive-yourself activity. Aside from cities and a few main highways, roads are poor, and wild is the word for Japanese driving. By law traffic moves to the left, but in practice goes brazenly down the center. Anyway, you can't read the signs.

Train service is excellent, following an inexorably prompt schedule, and usually preferable to motoring, because it gives you a look at both inner and outer Japan. The people love their trains and make a great occasion of the journey, bringing along their exquisitely packed lunch boxes. Men often remove their outer clothes, fold them neatly, and make the trip in their long white underwear. Scenery is interesting because you can see how this small, crowded country cultivates every inch of its land, right up to the train tracks.



Preliminary travel arrangements are best made by a travel agent. We feel that you'll have a better chance to pursue your particular interests if you insist upon a flexible, independent schedule instead of moving with a large group on a rigidly fixed itinerary. Independence costs more, but it's worth it.

This is not to say that package tours are to be avoided at any cost. They relieve you of responsibility and are a measure of security for people who may be timid of traveling alone in the Orient. But they are generally planned to give you too short a time in any one place. If for your own good reasons you prefer to travel with a group, choose an itinerary which gives you more than a week in Japan, savoring a few places well rather than rushing you all over the map.

Tokyo is a place to get an overall awareness of the bewildering struggle between old and new that is Japan's current problem. It is a modern metropolis, now the world's largest city, full of concrete and steel and glass, with the highest TV transmitter on earth an unfortunate matter of local pride. It is one of the fastest-moving, brightest neon-lit cities in the world, yet it still resounds with the click-clack of geta and the whistle of the noodle-vendor. Women in kimono with sleeping babies strapped on their backs regard the automatic rice cookers in store windows. It is a place of night clubs, burlesque shows, jitterbug, and coffee houses where young Japanese while away the hours listening to Beethoven or the latest French chansons. But any aware Westerner will feel that for the most part what is borrowed from the modern West is neither beautiful nor distinguished, as if the Occident's superficialities but little of its depth had taken over.

We would concentrate on Kyoto, the heart of old Japan, for here you see the indigenous beauty of the country, the things that have created Japan's unique aesthetic contribution to the world.

In Kyoto and Kobe, there are families who invite travelers to visit their homes, and this is an opportunity you shouldn't miss if you have no personal Japanese friends. The local JTB office can arrange this. You usually go in a small group with a student as interpreter. The 80¢ fee goes to him. Under no circumstance attempt to tip your host. You pay for your transportation, but you're not expected to pay for this hospitality. A gracious gesture would be to bring a small gift, as the Japanese do when they go visiting, or to send flowers later.

Tipping is a delicate subject in Japan at all levels. In many hotels and restaurants a 10% to 20% service charge is put on the bill. To be quite proper, tip money should be presented concealed in an envelope. Finesse in tipping always uses figures involving 3, 5, and 7, while 4 and 9 are inauspicious, therefore to be avoided.

Behaviorism

In this country where etiquette is so intricate that there are prescribed motions for closing a shoji or sitting on a cushion, what passes for good manners in Butte or South Orange may not always be considered polite. The Japanese are generally willing to make concessions to Western innocence, but aside from being courteous, it will be to your advantage to observe a few basic principles of etiquette.

Most Japanese admire calmness and quietness to such a degree that even a reticent American may seem a little hectic to them. They also conduct their affairs in an indirect, leisurely fashion, and it's impolite to come directly to the point. Americans have to make a conscious effort to slow down and wait —a rare exercise in self-induced serenity and one of the greatest gifts Japan has to give the overexcitable Western world.

To avoid misunderstandings, it's wise never to ask a question in the negative, because a Japanese, with perfect logic, will answer "Yes" where you would say "No." You will ask, "Doesn't my plane leave at five o'clock" and the answer is "Yes"—but it means, "Yes, your plane doesn't leave at five o'clock."

There are two procedures you are definitely expected to observe because they exist for purposes of cleanliness: the shoe removal custom and the Japanese way of taking a bath. Innkeepers are adamant about these.

How to take your shoes off

The Japanese preoccupation with footgear and the constant switching of it is not mystifying when you realize it exists to keep the tatami straw floor covering clean and intact in this society where you practically live on the floor.

As stockings, the Japanese wear tabi, washable fabric socks, divided at the big toe like mittens to let the sandal thong pass through. Outdoors they wear geta or zori, clogs or sandals of wood or plastic which raise the feet off the ground and so keep the tabi clean. Before going indoors, geta are exchanged for soft-soled, open-back, heelless felt slippers such as Western men use for bedroom slippers. In inns, restaurants, homes, museums, temples, shrines, and many shops, you are expected to remove your shoes and do likewise.

The Japanese entryway is rather like a foyer, designed as a sheltered shoe-switching zone, and is usually lined up with enough extra slippers for the use of all visitors. You change your shoes for slippers, sitting on the edge of the foyer, your feet resting on a long flat stepping stone—a sort of mystical boundary line between indoors and out. For most Westerners this involves acrobatics, because the indoor slipper must never touch the stepping stone. Your shoes are impounded here, stored in cabinets or on ledges until you leave the house.

Inside the house, the felt slippers must be removed before you enter a tatami-covered room, where you are supposed to walk only in tabi or stocking feet so that you will not soil or scuff the floor covering. Rubber-soled or straw slippers are provided for you to wear in the W.C.

So that you don't scuff your stockings it's a good idea to carry ankle socks to wear indoors.

From November through April, woolen clothes will help make up for the absence of central heating in Japanese houses. For floor-sitting, Western ladies are more comfortable in full skirts. Summer months are very warm and humid, so your clothing should be lightweight. Be prepared for rain, especially from April through June. Hats are not worn in the Orient and evening clothes are utterly useless unless you are on diplomatic business.

One of the joys of travel in Japan is its general cleanness. The law requires every building to be thoroughly house-cleaned twice a year, the tatami removed, aired, and cleaned. O-furo—the steaming hot bath—is daily ritual to 90 million Japanese, who may take their baths at home as a family, or in a public communal bath.

Japanese tend to regard Western squeamishness about nudity as more evil-minded than admirable. Still, you don't have to bathe in a crowd. In all the inns we experienced, it was possible to take a bath in private, and some inns even have rooms with private baths. No matter what your gender, do not be surprised if a little maid comes in to undress and scrub you.

How to take a bath

In most inns the bath is usually communal in that the hot "soaking water" in the bathtub is used by several guests. In Japan, soaping, scrubbing, and rinsing, which Westerners conduct in the bathtub proper, must be performed outside the tub. Bathroom floors are slatted or equipped with drains, so you can stand or sit on a bench and use the hinoki wood buckets and dippers to sluice yourself with. You must be thoroughly clean and rinsed before you step into the bathtub. It creates a scandal in the house if you bring soapsuds into the bath, because the bathers who follow you must use this same hot soak water. This is why innkeepers consider ignorant Western guests a hazard in the bathroom.

The tub itself is usually very deep and full of much hotter water than we're used to. There's a lid for the tub, which you're expected to replace when you've finished soaking, to keep the water from cooling. Out of the tub, the Japanese give themselves one more rinse and dry off with a damp towel.

Five o'clock in the evening is bath hour for most Japanese. But for a weary traveler nothing is more luxurious than a bedtime bath, followed by a massage after you've crawled into the futon, the pile-up of quilts on the floor which is the Japanese bed. Some inns provide a foam rubber mattress.

Living in an inn is very like staying in a private house. In a fine inn every room is different. Furnishings are sparse, but usually most carefully chosen and valued by the owners. Quilted bedding and the guest kimono are frequently of silk. China and lacquer are finer than what we think of as "restaurant or hotel" quality. So behavior should be just as circumspect as it would be if you were a private guest. You are assigned your personal maid, who in some occult way anticipates your every need with such attentive service as you wouldn't believe, and she seems to work a 24-hour day. Tip her 5 per cent of your bill (in an envelope). But you don't have to be told to tip. Your inclination is to shower the whole staff with gifts—you love them so.

How to speak up in a Japanese inn

In many of the small and most beguiling Japanese inns, English is not spoken. But don't let that deter you from the experience of staying in an inn. What you can't accomplish through gestures (and the astonishing clairvoyance of most Japanese maids), you can usually accomplish if you know a few basic words in Japanese. We have prepared a list of words and phrases of "inn-talk" which we shall send you, if you write, enclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope, to: Travel Department, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, 572 Madison Ave., New York 22, N. Y.

Restaurant manners

In a restaurant, you behave much as you would in a private home, for diners eat in a separate matted room—shoes off, sitting on cushions. Most restaurants furnish backrests and armrests if you need support. Japanese women kneel; the men sit cross-legged. Each party is served by their own maid or maids. Traditionally, five are considered the ideal dinner party—an auspicious number that encourages conversation. (Dinnerware and trays are sold in sets of five.) Table manners are most subtle and far too complicated to bring to perfection in a short time. The best technique is simply to observe how the Japanese cope with a meal. Most maids are not only willing but delighted and highly entertained if you ask them to show you how.

Leave-takings are never casual. Even in a restaurant, you will be bowed out to the street and the bowing may continue until you are completely out of sight. In an inn you're bowed out every time you leave the house, and at your final departure it would not be unusual for your maids to take you to the railroad station, to bid you more bowing adieux.

Besides JAL, the following airlines fly to Tokyo from the West Coast: Pan American, Northwest Orient, Canadian Pacific Air Lines (from Vancouver), and Qantas Empire Airways (via Australia).

By sea, usually about a 2-week voyage, ships of the American President Line, and the P & O-Orient Lines, take you from the West Coast to Yokohama, the port of Tokyo, and include Japan on cruise itineraries. A variety of arrangements can be made between airlines and steamships so that you can go one way by sea, the other way by air, or continue your journey home around the world.

To enter Japan as a tourist you need a visa, available from a Japanese consular office. Smallpox vaccination is a requirement for re-entering the U. S., and for travel in the warm month of June through September typhus and typhoid inoculations are recommended but not required.

For more specific travel information, get in touch with the Japan Tourist Association, 10 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, or 651 Market Street, San Francisco.

THE POWER OF THE UNFINISHED STATEMENT

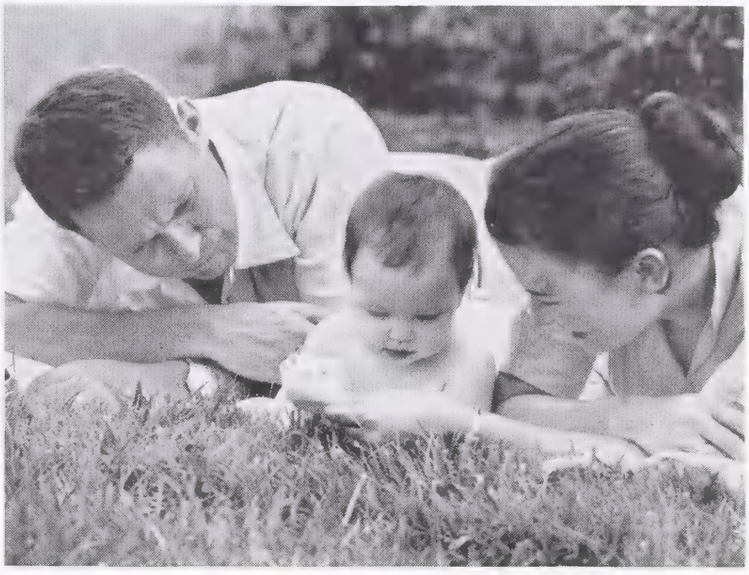
best in all the decorative arts. You cannot "fake" when your design is to be seen in juxtaposition to nature. A nature background will not allow pretension or triviality.



As a result, the goal of Japanese art has not been to substitute for the natural scene. Realistic rendering has been avoided as stultifying. Art has served more positively, in all its forms, as a means of seeing deeper into nature, through interpretation instead of imitation.

Art and Architecture of Japan, by Paine and Soper, sums it up:

"In decorative designing the genius of the Japanese is admittedly unique in the Far East. The arts are dependent on faith and feeling rather than on reason and science. When the desire to be lavish and ornamental goes too far, art forms tend to become an end instead of a means of expression. But, when used with restraint, formal beauty, which starts and ends with enjoyment in the concrete aspect of things, becomes one of the great methods of aesthetic manifestation.

"The artists of the decorative school of Japan show such direct vision, such charm of statement, and such simplification of form that each detail of nature seems to be an object possessed of more than natural beauty."

How to Send Your Baby to College on $9.50 a Week

A good college education today costs as much as $65 a week. But, the same education can be bought with much less financial strain if you start now, putting $9.50 a week into U.S. Savings Bonds. At college age there will be more than $11,000—and over $2,750 of it will come entirely from interest. That's like getting a whole year of college free.

HERE'S WHY U. S. SAVINGS BONDS ARE SUCH A GOOD WAY TO SAVE

• You can save automatically with the Payroll Savings Plan. • You now earn 3¾% interest at maturity. • You invest without risk under a U. S. Government guarantee. • Your money can't be lost or stolen. • You can get your money, with interest, any time you want it. • You save more than money—you're helping your Government pay for peace. • Buy Bonds where you work or bank.

NOW every Savings Bond you own—old or new—earns ½% more than ever before.

A hand-washing basin and its dipper are furnishings of every Japanese garden, usually treated as a quiet, eye-pleasing surprise. Here an asymmetric arrangement of three stone pools is fed by a trickle of water from a bamboo spout. Japanese delight in the subtle beauty of damp stone, keep pavements wetted down.

Circular beds of moss contrasting with a background of gray pebbles soothe the eye with their quiet, understated pattern. One such reiterated motif, as calming as this one, keeps the eye from roving restlessly, lessens the need to have competing elements of interest. Good idea for a maintenance-free landscape.

How to make a big event out of a little space

Certain well-formulated tricks help give the illusion of size where there is none

● In spaces smaller than most American back yards, the Japanese recreate in miniature the qualities we associate with great natural landscapes. By suggesting more than they literally are, they invite endless contemplation and imaginings.

What they try to do, and why, was well said by Soami, who died in 1525. "However small a garden may be," wrote the famous tea master and painter of ink landscapes, "it can be made to include high mountains many miles away, and to create waterfalls of tremendous height. There is a method of including distant waters and the vast expanse of the ocean. All this is possible by knowing how to handle water and rocks."

"The ultimate aim," he goes on, "of the landscape garden is to reveal the mysteries of nature and creation. This may be achieved by a simple flat garden with only a few rocks. However interesting may be the pattern, and beautiful the scenes, the truth of the hills may be lost if the garden is lacking in coherence. . . .

"Even in a limited area, a landscape suggestive of the heart of a mountain or a deep ravine can be created. Take for instance the case of a waterfall. If the waterfall is exposed to a full view from the top to the bottom, it will appear low and add very little to the scenic effect. But if the upper part is concealed by trees, the middle part partially hidden by a projecting rock or a branch of a tree, and the basin has a growth of grass or plants, then the fall may give the impression of a great height.

Stepping stones, wandering through a shallow water pool, make the act of entering a city house as enchanting as a stroll in a forest glade. Picture directly left gives you a glimpse of the property's street line, so you see in what tiny space this lovely bit of woodland seclusion is created. Rocks are most critically chosen in Japan for their shape, color, and texture, and there are societies of connoisseurs. Used as stepping stones, they are usually seven-eighths submerged in the earth and so are stable walking surfaces.

White gravel, clipped azalea, and a flowing, asymmetric planting plan create a cool and mysterious glade of a small space. The gravel, raked into swirling patterns, wanders like a river through hillocks of azaleas, deliberately shaped to simulate mountains. Plants are not permitted to flower, for color would disrupt the effect. The feeling of timelessness required of the Japanese garden is achieved by using slow-growing plants, pruned to retain their shape.

"It is the same with a pond. If it is large and square or has nothing to hide any part of it, one can see it all at a glance, and nothing is left to the imagination. Whereas the pond may be small, with winding contours partly concealed by trees and rocks, but may give the impression of a large lake or bay that might hint at an expanse of sea beyond.

"When a real tea master lays out a garden, he will try to conceal his art so that his work will look natural, and to create a deep forest or valley, even if a place may be surrounded by city dwelling houses."

The impact of Japan takes getting used to. The unfamiliar, the beautiful, the picturesque, the mystical—all are there in such profusion that most Western minds have trouble taking it all in. So it is fairer to oneself, and to Japan, not to attempt to go everywhere and do everything on the tourist circuit. The very nature of much of its beauty is that it must be seen at leisure, quietly, to be fully digested. It is wiser to concentrate on a few places and savor them well.

Out of our experience we make four major recommendations. And we can't make them too strongly.

NUMBER One: you need your own guide-interpreter. English is not as universally understood in Japan as you may have been led to believe. A guide is necessary for much more than sightseeing. Numbered street addresses are rare in Japan. Locations are loosely described ("near the moat, up the hill," "two blocks behind the Imperial Hotel, opposite the coffee house," "first house built in this block"). So you need a real native to steer you around. (Even taxi drivers can't find their way.) But don't settle for just any guide. For your purposes you—a reader of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL—need a very special kind of guide: someone with cultural awareness and a knowledge of art, architecture, gardening, food, everything that relates to your interests.

Your guide can determine the quality of what you do and see. If he's knowledgeable and sensitive to your likes and dislikes, he can unlock all sorts of worth-while and offbeat experiences—getting you into the most interesting restaurants, ordering for you the best foods of the area or the restaurant, helping you shop. Philosophically and financially, you should be prepared to have him with you, or within close call, during your whole journey.

A "courier" like this is a large order in any language. But the Japan Travel Bureau, 1 Marunouchi, Tokyo, through which guide-interpreters may be hired, assures us that it will make every effort to supply guides specially qualified to assist HOUSE BEAUTIFUL readers who inform the Bureau of their travel plans well in advance, outlining their special interests and itinerary. For a party of four or less, a guide's services are about $4.40 a day, excluding transportation, meals, and lodging, for which you pay. (Details are on page 121.)

Our second urgent recommendation is: Stay in Japanese inns, because they give you a chance to live as the Japanese do at home. Many of them were, in fact, private houses of the nobility and well-to-do—in short, choice places to observe the best in architecture and gardening. Even the more modest inns, built as commercial establishments, have a personal rather than a public aspect.

There is rarely a public lounge, lobby, or restaurant. Meals are served privately in your room which is covered in tatami like most Japanese rooms so you never wear shoes here. You can even dress Japanese, because the inn furnishes a kimono to each guest. You learn how to live at floor level, where you sit and sleep. Eventually your eye gets used to the small scale of things—an intimate vista of garden, the doll-size dressing chest, the foot-high lamp placed by your bed at night. In a house where no shoes are worn, your ear becomes accustomed to the quiet, accentuated occasionally by the swooshing sound of sliding shoji.

The inn will probably be your introduction to o-furo, the hot, hot bath and, despite what you may have heard to the contrary, it is perfectly possible to bathe in your accustomed solitary Western modesty.

Only when you experience firsthand this entirely different kind of living, can you appreciate the functional meaning and aesthetic values of Japan's architecture and design and the logic behind the customs that at first seem incomprehensible to you.

Japanese service, which is universally superb, is particularly delightful in the inns, where attendants seem to be of the caliber of servants in the finest private homes, and visitors seem to be guests.

English will probably not be spoken, so it is practical rather than extravagant to have your interpreter stay in the same inn.

A word of advice: Most inns are relatively small (5 to 25 rooms), and accommodations are much in demand, especially by the Japanese themselves who are perpetual travelers within their own country. So advance reservations are essential. But aside from this, you may have to talk your way in, for many of Japan's travel representatives believe that Westerners won't be happy in an inn, and so will politely try to sell you off the idea. You may have to insist that you know what you're doing. Another possible hitch is that some inn-keepers are reluctant to accept Western guests because they are afraid that we will commit gaucheries, like getting soapsuds in the bath water or scuffing the tatami by wearing shoes in the house. Once you've lived in an inn, you'll understand why these are not minor offenses.

So, in making reservations, it's a good idea to indicate your awareness of, or at least willingness to abide by the usual etiquette expected of guests. (See our notes on how to behave yourself, on page 122.) Some inns may require that you be introduced.

Japan has many excellent Western-style hotels to which we wholeheartedly refer travelers who require telephone message service and other commercial facilities that the inns do not usually offer.

OUR THIRD recommendation: By all means eat Japanese as often as you can—not only to discover the intriguing variety of the food, but to get an idea of how people eat and live in their homes. Japanese restaurants have more the character of private homes than of public places. Like the inns, many formerly belonged to important families and are frequently top-level examples of domestic design and landscaping. Almost always you enter through a meticulously tended courtyard and garden, with every leaf scrubbed and polished. You are expected to observe the same amenities as you would in visiting a private house, so you remove your shoes before entering the building.

With rare exceptions, native Japanese restaurants are not set up as ours are with one common dining room where all guests eat in the same area. Parties of diners are privately served in separate rooms and since these lovely rooms are likely to be large, you have a better chance of getting a reservation if your party consists of five or more. Reservations must be made in advance. Japan's dinner hour may start as early as five or six o'clock and is usually over by eight, so plan your schedule accordingly. Even Western-style restaurants are closed tight by ten. A really fine meal costs about what its quality equivalent would cost in the U. S. A. But we know of no American restaurant where you get such a beautiful and ample experience for your money, where the presentation of every course is a reminder that art can be an inseparable part of daily life.

Even in a counter restaurant, the selection of tableware is a matter of major importance. Much of it is made to order. Observe it well, for its design invariably reflects a sensitive taste. It has to in Japan, for the customers would be the first to complain if it were otherwise.

Needless to say, in order to enjoy Japanese food, you should master chopsticks, which is not as hard as it looks. (Some of the inns and restaurants we found memorable are listed at the end of this article.)

PHOTOGRAPH BY NORMAN CARVER, JR.

Entry garden of an inn is a surprising delight when you walk into it from the street. The planting is almost sparse, but combined with the pavement pattern, polished pebbles, and a stone lantern, the effect is welcoming and appealing. Roof overhangs shelter the shoe-removal porch.

Our fourth recommendation is a delicate one. But it represents what all seasoned travelers recognize as standard procedure for getting behind the scenes in any foreign country, and especially in a "closed society" like Japan's. It is simply this: Use your contacts and use them to the hilt! If you have professional or social associates with connections in Japan, get letters of introduction and let your coming be known. Natives or friends on the scene who know the ropes can open doors to sights and experiences you might never guess existed. Given proper introductions, the Japanese are almost embarassingly hospitable. It is the custom to take a gift with you when you visit, but your host is quite likely to give you a present.

FOR a first go-round with Japanese design, visit Tokyo's National Museum in Ueno Park. This is a treasury of traditional and historical beauty—screens, textiles, kakemono, lacquer, armour, sword hardware, ceramics, makimono, prints, calligraphy. Its collection of antique fabrics, miracles of weaving, tie-dyeing, painting, and embroidery will open your eyes to the cultivation of taste that existed in Japan when the Americas were still unexplored wilderness.

Behind the Museum in a particularly charming garden is a 17th-century tea house which may be your introduction to the importance of the tea ceremony in Japanese life and design.

You will find much that is shibui in its purest sense in the small and atmospheric Mingei-kan (folk art museum) at 816 Komaba, in the Meguro Ward of Tokyo. Here is a collection of the most unassuming but beautiful objects of common life, hand-woven fabrics, colored and printed with natural dyes, tea bowls and pots and metalwork made by old and traditional methods. Observe them well. There's no denying that a casual Western eye could easily pass by some of the most precious shibui things, because of their "normal" look and surface simplicity. But look again, into instead of at the quiet color of a fabric, through the glaze of a tea bowl, and you begin to take in the depth of beauty that is there, waiting to be explored. When you start to understand the subtleties of this, you begin to understand what shibui means.

You couldn't get a better briefing in modern Japanese life than by visiting Tokyo's great department stores, like Mitsukoshi, Takashimaya, and Matsuzakaya. These stores are great institutions in the real sense of the word, no mere purveyors of goods but community influences such as our department stores used to be but unfortunately no longer are. They serve as meeting places, with halls for exhibitions and weddings, with roof-gardens, theaters, shrines, and playgrounds, even including ferris wheels, where youngsters can be parked during shopping. Most stores have interpreter services for foreigners, usually on the main floor, and can arrange for overseas shipment of purchases. Their packing is perfection.

In the food department of the big department stores you could be sidetracked for a whole morning by the spectacular displays of foods, each treated like a treasure. The precise delicacy of the packaging illustrates what the Japanese mean when they say that the container must be worthy of the contained.

The profusion and variety of the goods in these stores seem to indicate that within the formal restrictions of etiquette that regulate Japan's home furnishings and dress, there is still plenty of opportunity for self-expression. The china departments alone are a miracle of variety. And you would never guess that there could be so many different colors and designs of zori and geta, the Japanese equivalent of shoes, until you see the available choice spread out, counter after counter.

AT THE Mitsukoshi department store, Tokyo's Marshall Field, the kimono and obi department reveals the wonderful variety, complexity and costliness of the kimono (which appears an uncomplicated outfit until you get up close to it). It calls for at least one, sometimes several, under-kimono, a neck scarf, and a system of under-sashes and cords to hold the outer sash or obi in place. The obi is most carefully selected and, like a jewel, may cost far more than the kimono itself. Don't miss the bridal shop for a sight of staggering magnificence. (See bridal costume on page 94.)

Kimono fabric is sold by the yard, but you must remember that it comes only 14″ wide. Mitsukoshi has a mouth-watering collection of under-kimono silk in solid colors, about 80 different shades. Obi, usually of fine-quality, heavy brocade, are 4¾ yards long, 30″ wide when split. We used them to make slippers, handbags, cushions, table runners, stoles, evening coats.

Believe it or not, most stores have departments for used-kimono and haori and travelers can pick up beauties at little price. Few Japanese will buy another's cast-offs because they are often marked with family crests. But Westerners have no such compunction. The kimonos are in beautiful condition, having been taken apart, cleaned, and restitched—the usual cleaning method.

An excursion that's lots of fun and a bargain is a visit to K. Hayashi's Kimono Department Store, at 10th Street and T Ave., Tokyo, for a great stock of used lovelies.

Maruzen, the large, well-stocked book shop on the Nihonbashi has a good department of modern crafts.

THE most worth-while souvenirs in Japan are, of course, their marvelously made art objects, one-of-a-kind beauties you cannot get anywhere else in the world at the price. Antique screens, kakemono, lacquer boxes, netsuke (imaginatively carved knobs like our watch fobs), swords and sword ornaments, objects of porcelain and pottery, a whole gamut of elegance which takes its place with remarkable appropriateness in Western homes.

By a quite misleading choice of words, the shops selling these lovely things advertise themselves to Westerners as "curio" shops. In Tokyo there are curio dealers everywhere, but the concentration of their shops is on B, D, and F Avenues. You can also find such art in the tea ceremony departments of the great stores.

In Kyoto, which is the acknowledged hub of Japanese culture and the center of arts and crafts, the most intriguing curio shops are on Shinmonzen and Furumonzen Streets and on Kawaramachi Avenue.

To shop satisfactorily you should have your interpreter with you, even in the department stores. To see the best a small shop offers, you usually have to talk your way into the back room where the real treasures are generally kept. You will see with what infinite care a fine piece of art is treated, usually silk-wrapped and nested into its own perfectly fitting box. The name of the artist and the object's former owners may be written on the box. If an article has belonged to an owner of acknowledged taste, it is considered more precious.

You must be prepared to spend more time in shopping than you're used to, drinking a cup of tea with the shop-owner, and waiting a Western eternity for even the most inconsequential purchase to be lovingly and meticulously wrapped. Most shops will ship purchases.

Silks are an excellent buy in Japan. The finest are woven in Kyoto, including "fingernail tapestries" and reproductions of Imperial brocades. Several silk firms are so handsomely housed and their exhibition wares so lovely, that you're combining sightseeing with shopping when you visit them. In Tokyo, don't miss the Silk Gallery, at Shiba Takanawa, and the Kanebo Silk Store near the Ginza. In Kyoto, visit Oridono and the Tatsumura Institute, which is in a baronial mansion with an exceptional garden and a carp pool.

Two of the sightseeing bus tours worth taking in Tokyo are these, organized by Japan Travel Bureau. A Saturday tour, "Art Around Town," takes you to see woodblock printing, pottery making, a bonsai (dwarf tree) collection, flower arranging, Japanese dancing and a tea ceremony.

Another is a day-long Sunday tour which takes you to the Mingeikan, introduces you to some of the major Buddhist temples and Shinto shrines, and gives you lunch in a farm-style restaurant, "Furusato."

THERE are "night life" tours for those who want them—not at all to be despised, we're told, even if you're usually allergic to "rubberneck bus trips," because they give you a glimpse of the geisha and a picture of the curious popularity of western-style cabaret. (Night tours, incidentally, offer ladies traveling alone an acceptable way to see Japan's night life.)

Re geisha, you have to be personally entertained by them to get some notion of their curious profession which is not necessarily what you might think it is. Geisha are intensively trained, licensed entertainers whose behavior is strictly regulated by custom and law. They are exhaustively schooled from childhood in charm, etiquette, and polite conversation, as well as in dancing, singing, and musical instruments, for their function is to be pleasant companions as well as entertainers. Personality and talent count for more than beauty.

They are engaged for private parties, usually dinners, where they attend the guests with personal solicitude, see that the sake cups are never empty, engage in complimentary pleasantries, organize the company into parlor games, sing, dance, play the samisen. In Japan's male-dominated society, their gracious ways are of course aimed at pleasing men, but Western women present at a geisha party get just as solicitous attention.

A geisha to each guest is the ideal and quite costly arrangement, since these mannerly charmers can command as much as $30 or more an evening. By custom, in most areas, there must be at least two geisha at a party, and they may entertain only between noon and midnight. You don't go to a geisha house. The geisha comes to you, hired through a central registry office. Your hotel, inn, or guide can bring this to pass. The party is more fun if there are five or more guests.

Noh, probably the most complicated and rigidly stylized drama in the world, is performed with masks, a musical background, and a chanting chorus as in ancient Greece. All actors are men. Plays are delivered in 14th- or 15th-century court language, as they were written, understandable to Japanese scholars, so they are highbrow stuff, although many Japanese men and women study Noh as a hobby.

Noh is shibui because of the discipline and restraint of its presentation. The setting is usually a single pine tree. Its gestures are symbolic, economical, a slight movement representing the passage of time, an emotion, a battle. A highlight in a play may occur when no acting occurs at all, but a mood is sustained. It's a day-long affair, but you needn't attend for the whole time. Your guide or hotel can arrange for you to see a performance if one is on the boards.

THE more popular, less long-hair drama, kabuki, is similarly bound by conventions. It is esoteric enough, but not shibui, full of blood and thunder and utterly absorbing because what's going on isn't completely unfathomable. The English program notes at Tokyo's Kabukiza theater help keep things fairly clear.

Remarkable is the convincing acting of the men who play the female roles. The finished results reflect Japan's painstaking family-system training. Kabuki artists are either born into or adopted into the profession, beginning their training when they are three or four.

For all its smallness as a country, there is so much of fascination to see and do in these four islands of Honshu, Kyushu, Shikoku and Hokkaido that it's almost presumption to recommend that you visit certain places and see certain things to the exclusion of others. In Kyoto alone there are 1,700 temples and shrines and palaces, and these are rarely single, independent buildings but complex communities, like elegant little villages.

In the normal course of events, you can hardly avoid seeing the major sights because they are listed in every guide book and there are guide books galore. (The most exhaustive and factual of these is the Japan Tourist Industry Bureau's Official Guide, $6.50 in the U. S. A.) Informative travel literature is copiously available from the offices of the Japan Tourist Association, 10 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, and 651 Market Street, San Francisco.

BUT in the long run, you will find it most rewarding to approach Japan as a culture to be observed and understood, rather than as a series of sights to be seen. And so we highly recommend a preliminary study in books such as those listed on page 47.

There are more than 55,000 inns in Japan, but HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has sampled the following few and found them delightful: Tokyo: Kyoine; Fukudaya (in Chiyoda section). Kyoto: Tori; Doi; Tawaraya; Hiiragiya. Hakone Area: Matsunochaya; Kowakien (combination modern Japanese inn and Western hotel with older Japanese cottages available). Yamanaka Spa: Kajikaso. Yuzawa Spa: Hakuunro.

Two Tokyo restaurants which we found exceptional experiences gastromically and aesthetically are:

Tsujidome, Bunshun Building, 5-5 Ginza-Nishi, a tea house on the third floor of an office building. Its owner is a gourmet-artist specializing in the delicate "tea ceremony cuisine," which is served with great beauty and ceremonial ritual calling for quiet and mannerly deportment.

Daigo, a restaurant on the grounds of Seishoji Temple, which specializes in vegetable dishes prepared by Buddhist monks. A nine-course dinner in which bean curd is the main ingredient is an astonishingly varied and gourmet meal. Here again the food is sensitively and ceremoniously presented and quiet manners are in order. Reservations are necessary, as in all really fine restaurants.

Other Tokyo restaurants we found particularly worthwhile are: Hanacho-Honeten; Hachinoki; Nagoya; Kino-e; Yugiri; Shinkiraku; Ten-ichi specializing in tempura; Izukin, specializing in sushi.

In Kyoto: Tsuruya; Toriyasu; Hyotei; Daitoryo; Kiyoji Tsubosaka; Dai-Ichi (specialists in turtle); Kicho (in nearby Arashiyama). Fine counter restaurants are: Naruse; Shiruko; Kawashige; Masa; and Wakahama.

THE PROFITS OF A LONG EXPERIENCE WITH BEAUTY

utensils were nothing but imperfections. I call these 'beauty in irregularity,' and it frequently appears in shibusa.

"I think that, in general, what is called a shibui color is a shaded one. It always has a darkling serenity, and one can also explain that it is not completely pure. For example, if the refined chemical, cobalt, is compared with natural cobalt, the latter is shibui. The former is gaudy—its color is too pure, while the latter contains impurities in color. This impurity is a distortion in color and is an irregularity. This adds shibusa to color. Or, the refined cobalt has had its impurity too well controlled, while the natural product can be considered untouched. So, by this token, freedom is always present in shibusa. And freedom spontaneously invites irregularity.

"If beauty does not exist without freedom, may we not say that there is in shibusa, which includes irregularity, the basic quality of beauty, that is, the beauty of freedom? Whatever kind of person seeks beauty, the fact that he will sooner or later return to the beauty of shibusa shows that the quality of the most basic beauty is inherent in shibusa.

"WE HAVE listed the various qualities and, if we take another glance at them, perhaps we can accept them as extremely negative. They are either plain, silent, tranquil; passive qualities adhere to shibusa. The concept of Nothingness and Emptiness are not only nothing and all-renouncing—rather they are concepts of all-inclusive nothingness, and nothingness is equivalent to being. Even silence can be described as 'a silence like a thunder-bolt.' The Oriental concept of silence acting as the opposite of silence is a profound one, so one may say that in shibusa there are qualities difficult to describe. Therefore, by thinking of opposite meanings, as follows, undoubtedly we may clarify the meaning of shibusa, but actually it might be better to accept it as a word with elements not possessing true antonyms.

"Shibusa has always been an exquisiteness difficult to express. However, since human common sense can always understand by means of contrasting conceptions, we can at least try to give some antonyms. In general, the opposites of shibusa are:

1. Showy or gaudy—although the direct opposite of showy or gaudy would be sober, or plain, certainly a vivacious kind of showiness can be considered the opposite of shibusa.

2. Next comes loudness. As long as sobriety and tranquility are important elements of shibusa, loudness can be considered an opposite. Things heavily ornamented, for example, destroy shibusa. The fact that, among the masterpieces of tea utensils, not a single one is dominated by ornamentation, is evidence of this.

3. Sumptuousness. This is the opposite of simplicity and tranquility, so it stands opposed to shibusa. In the same way, aristocratic pomp is, naturally, remote from the concept of shibusa. It is well to note that masterpieces of tea utensils, which can be called the embodiment of shibusa, are never chosen from the sumptuous ones.

4. Vulgarity or commonplaceness, which is close in meaning to shallowness, is the opposite of shibusa, which contains the elements of calm and depth. Superficial or shallow things are always negations of shibusa.

"Now, while it is not definitely known just when the word shibusa came into general use in Japan, its use spread with the popularization of the tea ceremony, so that it can be said that it became widely used by the end of the 17th Century. What kind of influence has it had on the life of the people?

"Shibusa guaranteed to the life of the people a high aesthetic level. Under this standard, people refined their artistic sentiments. And, as the standard spread, the whole nation began to maintain the standard. In this development the role of the tea ceremony devotee must be highly valued. Fortunately, this standard, shibui, was directly communicated by means of the actual tea things. If one looks back, it is clear that there have been various flaws in the tea utensils, but in general these tea things have retained the beauty of shibusa. Therefore, if there had been no tea ceremony, and the tea utensils had not been treasured, people might very soon have forgotten the value of shibusa. However, fortunately, tea things repeatedly demonstrated to us the beauty of shibusa. One may say that this gave the proper direction to the aesthetic training of the Japanese."

On our cover: A pebbly path, strewn with the fallen leaves of autumn, winds slowly through the gardens at Katsura Palace in Japan. Though the Japanese revere all forms of nature, this scene, with its misty quality, its bitter color, its touch of sadness, would be considered shibui.

"Bimini" ensemble of rich Avisco rayon and acetate

Serene. Cool. Restful. An inviting haven decorated with an ensemble of luxury-weight Avisco rayon and Avisco acetate. Making use of Avisco fibers' color-richness, the dramatic nubby textured "BIMINI" stripe-effect was achieved with two pastel colors, each in a solid stripe and then combined in a band of narrow stripes. Machine-washable.

Tailored bedspread with open corners and simulated kick-pleat, in full or twin, about $14.95, king-size about $29.95; the 36″ cafe curtains, about $4.95 pair; the 90″ pinch-pleated draperies, used here on the canopy bed, about $11.95 pair. Available in blue/green, aqua/gold, beige/taupe, peach/mauve . . . at fine stores everywhere.

American Viscose Corporation makes the Avisco fibers.

CULTURED WOOD MAKES THIS "VERVE" DINING ROOM YOUR SMARTEST BUY IN FASHIONABLE FURNITURE

Cultured Wood®

Cultured Wood is produced through an exclusive Kroehler process in which natural wood is reduced to fibers, then re-formed to create this revolutionary new furniture making material.

Cultured Wood, a Kroehler exclusive, makes these Verve designs longer lasting and easier to live with—helps them resist the time and weather that causes doors to warp, drawers to stick, and finishes to crack and check. Cultured Wood, used in Kroehler doors, drawer fronts and cabinet tops, is one reason Verve is your smartest buy.

The other reason—good taste in styling! Look at the detailing of these pieces from the Verve collection. Notice the hand crafted brass-and-ceramic pulls, the rosewood veneer parquetry, the soft sheen of the Velvet Walnut veneers, the Shaker influence of the baluster chairs.

Verve designs by Kroehler, for living room, dining room and bedroom, are your smartest buys in more ways than one!

Read how four families like yours

From East to West, families are discovering the many wonders of Medallion Homes equipped by General Electric: (1) Major electric appliances that do everything but wash the dog. (2) Eye-saving lighting throughout the home. (3) Full housepower—wiring planned for all present and future electrical needs. In addition, in Gold Medallion Homes you'll find electric heating that lets you dial different temperatures for each room, or a heat pump that heats in winter and cools in summer.

For additional facts, phone your electric utility. Why not right now?

HOUSTON, TEXAS

In the comfort of her Weathertron-cooled living room, Lotha Steininger relaxes while her husband, Don Steininger, puts the finishing touches to the landscaping of their new Gold Medallion Home.

The General Electric Weathertron heat pump cools and heats their entire house on one thermostat setting. "This crazy weather!" says Mrs. Steininger. "One minute you freeze, the next you roast. From now on, though, I'll never have to get up in the middle of the night to hunt for a blanket. This Weathertron is really automatic."

ROSLYN, LONG ISLAND

The General Electric kitchen of Mr. and Mrs. Seymour Simon's air conditioned ranch house is the focal point of family activity.

Mrs. Simon credits her General Electric appliances with helping her become a gourmet cook. She finds cooking with electricity so neat and easy: "I never even need an apron. Everything's so automatic that even the hardest dishes are easier to cook. And the cleaning up afterward is so simple, with that dishwasher," she explains.

"Honestly, I'm a member of my family again. Barbara, my daughter, helps me load the dishwasher. Then I flick it on and have the rest of the evening free."

enjoy and afford homes full of electric comfort

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA

"They called it 'light for living' and now I know just what they meant," says Edith Weber. "For example, I never have to worry about the children having proper reading light. Wherever they're reading, I know the light is right."

She and Dr. Weber found a variety of decorative effects possible with lighting tailored to the home. Most important to Mrs. Weber is the remote control system which operates lights throughout the house.

"As a doctor, my husband is often called away," she explains. "I like to know that I can reach out and turn on any light in the house or patio without moving from my bed."

DELMONT, PENNSYLVANIA

Heat is radiated from electric cables hidden in the ceiling of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Ardisson's Gold Medallion Home. Here, the Ardissons enjoy the warmth of their living room despite the chilly weather outside.

Mr. Ardisson, as head of his own electrical company, is no stranger to electricity in the home. "Living here for a year, though, has opened my eyes," he says. "I never knew how it felt to have even, draft-free heating in every corner of the house."

Added Mrs. Ardisson: "Spring cleaning this year didn't include washing the walls."

cotton is a natural

Home is the stage for a good part of our lives. And nothing sets it more beautifully than cotton. Cotton is so full of cheer — in carpeting underfoot, in drapes at the windows, in coverings on sofas and deep chairs. Cotton takes so beautifully to color, always looks so fresh and is so successfully refreshed. It follows then, that for home furnishings, cotton is a natural! National Cotton Council, Memphis—New York.

What is a Hammond Organ?

...it is a Mr. and Mrs. thing...a rare chance for a husband and wife to join forces in relaxing their nerves as they enrich their lives.

Why have Hammond Organs become so popular? Ask the woman who finds playing a Hammond a pleasant relief from housework, meal-making, and childish conversations. Ask the man who finds organ music a refreshing change from the tensions and tumult of a long day at work. Ask them both if this shared interest hasn't given their days new zest, their lives new purpose and contentment. Then ask your Hammond dealer about his wide range of models, styles, and prices. Any Hammond Organ can be yours for only $25 down at most dealers. Low monthly payments.

"Our SUN VALLEY All-Year Gas Air Conditioner keeps us cool all summer... warm all winter!"

SAY MR. AND MRS. VIRGIL RITTMANN OF EL PASO, TEXAS

When Mr. and Mrs. Rittmann built their new home they made it an all-gas home. Long experience had taught them the economy, dependability and comfort that only modern Gas can supply. The temperature in their new home remains constant throughout the year. In El Paso where it gets as hot as 107 degrees and as cold as six below zero, their Arkla-Servel combination cooling-heating unit gives cool summer, warm winter comfort efficiently and economically.

They claim this unit is actually paying for itself because of trouble-free operation, and the economy of fuel. Investigate the many advantages of year-round Gas air-conditioning. Whether you're building a new home, or remodeling your present home, insist on an Arkla-Servel Sun Valley* All-Year® Gas Air Conditioner.

CAREFREE OPERATION—Your Sun Valley is a cinch to operate—just one easy-to-set thermostat. A single, compact unit cools in summer, heats in winter. Your Sun Valley provides low annual maintenance and long life, too, because there are no moving parts in the cooling cycle. In fact, you can compare the life of a Gas unit to the life of your home.

Call your local Gas company, your Arkla-Servel dealer or write Arkla Air Conditioning Corp., 812 Main Street, Little Rock, Ark. There's a Sun Valley available in models and sizes to fit any home. Five-year warranty.

Decorator's Diary

By some unfathomable set of personal vibrations, I seem to magnetize nervous, adoring mothers whose children are more sensitive, more allergic, more gifted, or more something than others. That's how I explain the presence of Mrs. Carlin and Betsy in my life and thought. But I'm grateful to them, because if it hadn't been for their problems I mightn't have been so early to discover a new carpeting development which lets you have custom-order looks at slim prices.

My assignment was to do a bedroom for Betsy who is ten, allergic to wool, very fond of blue and, according to her mother, gifted with an impeccable design sense. In fact, she had already made her immovable choice of the printed fabric she wanted for her bedspread and draperies. It was a pretty, all-over resist pattern of white leaves on a blue ground, in linen. It was immovable because it had been purchased in Sweden or Denmark during the past summer, and it did credit to Betsy's taste, besides saving me a shopping job.

All looked so simple, I took out my pen and notebook to jot down the few remaining things the room needed. "Blue painted walls. Corkboard panel and rack for Betsy's drawings—paint rack white. Refinish birch bed and chest. Desk—two small birch chests of drawers plus white Micarta-covered slab top. White balloon pulley lamp over desk. White muslin half-curtains. Flooring—white vinyl tile."

"What about the rug?" asked Mrs. Carlin, reading over my shoulder. "Betsy must have a bedside rug—she takes cold so easily, she can't step out of bed to bare floor. But she can't have a wool rug."

That too sounded simple—a non-allergenic rug isn't the hardest thing in the world to find in these days of synthetic fibers and wonderful cotton weaves—so off I went into the rug market with a swatch of the printed leaf fabric in my hand. Object: to match the blue. And it is most peculiar how, with all the shades of blue you see when you don't want them, the right one always seems to elude you when you're trying to match something.

All things considered, I was shot with luck, though. Word had reached me that the American Viscose rayon rug fiber called "Avicron" was being woven into carpeting by La France Industries, so I showed up at their New York distributors, the Warco Carpet Mills, swatch in hand.

"Can you match this in a rayon rug—say, about four and a half by six and a half?" I asked.

"Sure," said the man, "we could do it, I suppose, but it would be a pretty intricate job to get that little pattern perfectly. Most people prefer to take a motif from a patterned fabric or a wallpaper and enlarge it—you know, blow it up so that the rug is inlaid with one or two larger designs that suggest the pattern of the fabric."

My mouth was hanging open. For he was not only telling me that I could match the color of the fabric, but that I could actually match the pattern. I was hearing,

PALAZZO®

CLASSIC ELEGANCE FOR YOUR HOME

There's a new word, a new fashion for your home. PALAZZO*.

WHAT IS IT? Palazzo is many things . . . all elegant. It is a chair and sofa, beds and sheets, towels and table linens, china and crystal, glass and silverware, rugs and carpets, sheer curtains, matching bedspreads and draperies. Palazzo is a throw pillow of many hues, wall sconces and lamps, television and stereo . . . just about everything for everywhere in your home.

PALAZZO is a theme woven of many patterns. It is a scroll on a fabric or carving on a chair, a delicately etched design on a drawer pull. It is a pattern underfoot on a carpet, a caryatid holding a lamp shade or carved on a wall sconce. Palazzo is not a single design or pattern but a collection of designs and patterns, all related one to the other.

HOW DID IT START? Palazzo began centuries ago. In Pompeii, in the Orient, in the days of Napoleon in France, in the English Regency Period in England, and most recently, in Italy. It was there that Macy's began to collect the beautiful antiques out of which Palazzo grew. From these antiques, motifs and designs were translated to an inclusive Italian Regency coterie — suitable for your American way of living.

WHY DID IT START? To bring you, the homemaker of today, a completely coordinated collection which you could use all through the house without asking a decorator "what goes with what"? Everything in Palazzo goes with everything else. Colors were selected to enhance each other, lamps are the right height for tables, crystal goes with china. Linens, whether for your table or for your bed, have an affinity for each other . . . and fabric designs and colors are as varied as a peacock's plumage and as brilliant.

WHO MAKES IT? The country's top style leaders . . . names you are proud to own . . . Drexel furniture; Cabin Crafts carpets and rugs; Syroco decorative accessories; Motorola television and stereo high fidelity; Bloomcraft decorative fabrics, bedroom ensembles, cushions and draperies; Tyndale lamps by Wilmar; Vera linens; George Briard glassware and other accessories; Bartmann and Bixer sheer curtain fabrics; Royal China; Gorham silver; and selected imports. Each article, large or small, is superbly made and handsomely crafted with a costly look, but not an expensive price tag.

WHERE DO YOU BUY IT? At Macy's, of course, and fine stores across the country, many listed at the end of the Palazzo house which follows.

Macy's

On the following pages, you'll see beautiful Palazzo coordinated in a complete house that invites you to move right in . . .

*A home of great taste.

Isn't it wonderful to step into a home that has real charm and taste without being ostentatious and costly? On these following pages, walk with us through our completely coordinated Palazzo home. You'll find that it has all these qualities plus an elegance of decor and design especially suited to your contemporary way of living.

Hospitable and inviting, that's the Palazzo entrance hall and dining area, completely carpeted in Cabin Crafts Palazzo pattern "Salerno". Made of 100% long-wearing, springy and luxurious DuPont 501 Nylon, "Salerno" needs no pampering because of its exclusive Cabin Crafts Formula "N" stay-clean finish. This rich, deeply piled carpet is available in all of the 12 Palazzo colors, Grotto Blue, Mist Blue (seen on page 28), Malachite (shown on these two pages), Gold Leaf, Sienna, Crimson, Oyster, Gunmetal, Tabac, Sandstone, Piedmont Green, Travertine (seen on page 27). Only $10.95 per yard.

The warmth of candlelight bids you welcome to our elegant Palazzo dining room. Come—sit by the table as we tell you about its treasures.

The richness of mellow, antique cherry* in the Palazzo furniture collection by Drexel floods the room with beauty. Isn't it a joy to dine with such elegance? Notice the fine detailing on each piece—the authentic design of the antique brass hardware. How aristocratic the

And see the graceful arches of the stately trellised china cabinet . . . its finish of Palazzo white with blue-grey stripings!

On every page you'll find Palazzo furniture by Drexel—made more beautiful by the superb craftsmanship, the excellent design and magnificent finishes so characteristic of all furniture bearing the "by Drexel" seal. All at prices less than you would expect for such quality: for example, the dining table with four chairs $494.50.

One of the wonderful attributes of our contemporary living is the refreshing way we bring the outdoors in. What could be more delightful than our Palazzo bedroom opening on a tree-sheltered patio?

It's a Bloomcraft* bedroom, of course! Inviting your guest to be at home is a quilted coverlet, paired with a dust ruffle of the Palazzo print. The handsome drapery and valance framing the windows are from the many Bloomcraft fabrics available by the yard or in ready-mades. Only Bloomcraft is so adept at blending fine fabrics and colors into a coordinated look for every room in your house . . . at moderate prices. On pages 25, 28, see the sheer white brocaded fabric, "Lucia", and lots of wonderful pillows (page 27). Pillows for TV viewing or just to be decorative. Palazzo single bed coverlet, in white only, about $20.00; "Castleton" dust ruffle, in malachite (shown), apricot, saffron yellow and venetian violet, about $18.00. Prices slightly higher in the West

While our charcoal brazier cooks away merrily, we can relax and feast our eyes upon the beauties of our Palazzo family-living room. Star-gazers or record faddists, this entertainment center was designed with fun and gaiety in mind for every member of your family.

Filling our family room with glorious wall-to-wall sound is our Palazzo stereo hi-fi by Motorola. Its superb performance is matched [illegible] of the cabinet made by Drexel. Concealed behind the graceful brass trellised arches are 3 separate amplifiers and 3 separate speaker systems. You can play stereo and all other records, or listen to FM/AM radio. Our matching Palazzo Motorola television in cabinetry made by Drexel (also shown on page 28) has doors which conveniently fold back out of sight for more watching pleasure. For every room in your home, you'll get the most in home entertainment from Motorola television and stereo high fidelity.

Serenity and peace. Enchantment and dreams. That's the spell cast by our master bedroom and bath as you enter its doorway. Isn't that the kind of mood everyone needs at the end of a busy day?

It's Drexel's combination of wonderfully rich cherry woods and handsome designs that makes this Palazzo bedroom furniture so beautiful. And it has so many "little touches". The interlaced ovals in the headboard of the bed, the mirrors elongated for better viewing and prettier decor, dressers and night tables filled with ample storage space. Look back into the charmingly arched alcove. Drexel's lovely tufted chair is ready to bring you hours of measureless contentment and comfort. Be certain of the reassuring "by Drexel" seal on each piece of Palazzo furniture before you buy, your hallmark of quality and lasting good taste. Send 5¢ for your Drexel Palazzo booklet, or 35¢ for the "Portfolio of Fine Furniture", 3 Huffman Rd., Drexel, N. C.

Open door to luxury . . . and our Palazzo Master bath! Can't you feel the aura of elegance, the clean sweetness about you? All are a part of our harmoniously coordinated, beautiful Palazzo home.

It's sheer heaven to find such marvelous towels, sheets, blankets and shower curtains made-for-each-other in color and design. The boldly traced honeysuckle motif on the petal-light blanket is repeated more delicately on every bed and bath fashion. Solid color towels are coordinated, too. It's part of the plan to make your private world even more your personal delight with the color blending of bedroom and bath. All prints and solid colors are in many brilliant Palazzo hues.

Bath towels $2.98 each; sheets: twin $3.98, full $4.98; shower curtains $10.98; blankets: print $18.95, coordinating solid colors $16.95. All prices are approximate.

In the glow of evening, our Palazzo house finds the time to dine, quietly and elegantly. It's the beauty of our Palazzo setting that gives such a festive air to our table . . . and makes such intimate dining moments pure pleasure.

Shining like jewels upon our table are the many pieces of Gorham sterling. The pattern, Villa, has the richness and magnificence of an old Venetian heirloom. Deeply sculptured, and polished to the sheen of a fine silk, Villa by Gorham proudly entertains, year in and year out, becoming more beautiful with each day's use. That's because Gorham sterling is artistically designed, and patterns are created to last regardless of the taste of the times. When you select your sterling, you naturally want the finest, Villa by Gorham. Six-piece place setting, $32.75. Three-piece place setting, $17.50. Prices subject to change without notice. All prices include Federal Tax.

Candelabra, pair, $78.50; Sugar and Creamer, $20.75; Salt and Pepper, $11.75

The opulence of our Palazzo decorative accessories takes your breath away at unexpected times! A magnificent SyrocoWood clock and a pair of sconces over a chest, the delicate medallion plaques seen handsomely on either side of our equally handsome crested, double-framed mirror—all are hand carved designs by Syroco. Available in either Syroco's exclusive Palazzo gold or antique white, these beautiful accessories add the important final touch to your home. Shown above (also on page 27): 21" wall clock, battery-powered $49.95, or 8-day guaranteed jewel movement, $39.95; mirror, $44.95; sconces, the pair, $19.95 (also on page 27); plaques, the pair, $19.95; boudoir mirror (page 26), $14.95; collection of wall brackets (page 26) from $4.95. All prices approximate retail; slightly higher in the West.

Doesn't the friendly glow of the many handsome lamps enrich our Palazzo home? It is the good taste and magnificent styling that make our Palazzo Tyndale lamps such an important decorative asset for your home. Shown above: the gold finished wreath—embossed column lamp with imported lead crystal fount is 38" high, has 3-way lighting and hand-sewn silk shantung shade. One of the many-splendored Palazzo collection of Tyndale lamps by Wilmar Company. Approximately $49.95. Other Tyndale lamps on pages 26, 27 and 28.

Our breakfast strategy begins with handsome Palazzo earthenware . . . which continues on through the days and into the years with its charm. It's made by Royal China, long famed for fine dinnerware made in America by American craftsmen. Nicest thing about Royal China's many patterns are their affinity for the dishwasher . . . all of the beautiful patterns stay that way because they are sealed under the glaze. Shown: Gray and white "Greek Key" design, service for eight, $19.95. Also on page 25, the more formal pattern, "Crest", in Antique gold on white. Royal China Inc., Sebring, Ohio.

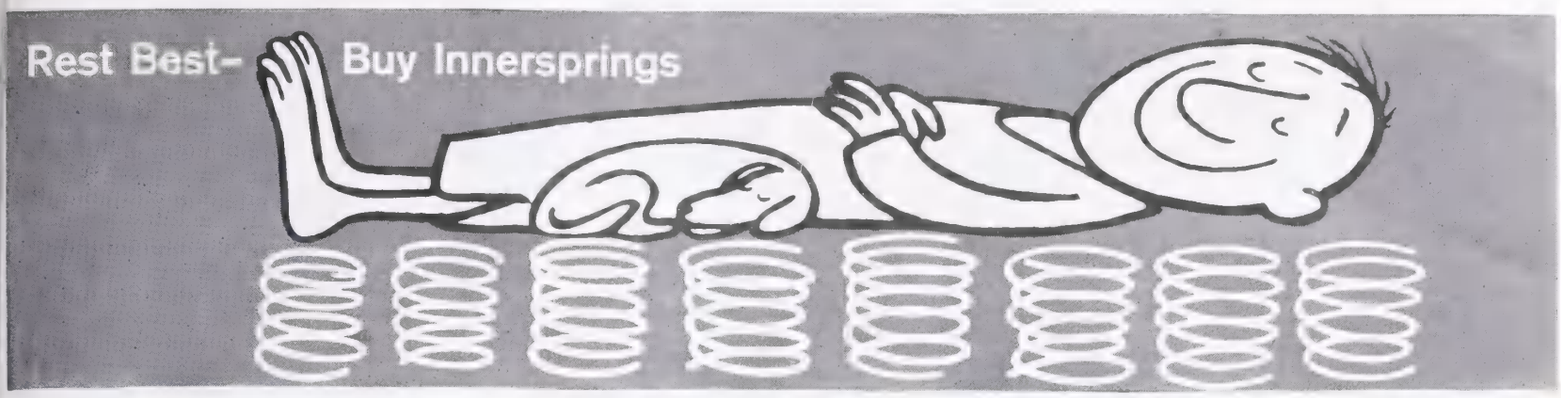
in fact, a commercial extension of an idea for making your own patterned rugs which HOUSE BEAUTIFUL had inaugurated back in September of 1955.

I got down to cases immediately, and here's the story. La France makes a kind of carpet called Amerilux that is capable of being cut out into shapes and then filled in with similar cutouts in contrasting colors, all firmly held together with a specially developed waterproof adhesive. It's a sort of jigsaw principle that lets you design your own patterns for all-over carpeting or area rugs: strips, blocks, stars, coats of arms, pictures, and it's, of course, a natural if you'd like a rug to carry out a motif from a fabric or wallpaper. The work can be done only by specially licensed and trained dealers, who are equipped with the patented cutting knife and adhesive that make this possible. The rug fabric itself is a close, low-pile Wilton weave, 54″ wide, backed by 3/16″ or 1/4″ of sponge rubber, and besides being woven in Avicron, it comes in nylon-and-Avicron, nylon-and-wool, and all nylon.

Needless to say, Betsy has not one but two bedside rugs which suggest her white-on-blue leafy fabric. And at a pretty amazing price. Our carpeting, which comes in eight stock colors, cost about $10 a yard, not including, of course, the cutting out and inlaying of the special pattern. This has to be designed and cut into a template by a woodworker to serve as the carpet dealer's cutting guide.



I was so overjoyed at my discovery that I didn't immediately comprehend the full meaning of this new kind of carpeting, but Mrs. Carlin did. "What a great idea," she said, "for wall-to-wall carpeting! If a spot got soiled or worn just cut it out and replace it."

My first impression of Miss McCracken: a lady whose checkbook is in a perpetual state of perfect balance. No bank would dare to dispute her efficiency.

When she entered my shop I instinctively stood up at my desk as though I were to recite a lesson.

She is, in fact, a retired schoolteacher and, whether she likes it or not, she still carries with her the awesome demeanor of her former calling. But she was really a darling—a pretty honest darling, too, when she came right out and told a C-average like me that she felt utterly incapable of setting

The wonderful, wacky world of sleep

If you followed the popular medical advice of the Middle Ages about how to sleep better, you would have your head shaved, be bled to an anemic white, then gorge yourself with a mixture of wild carrot, parsley and peony seeds. Records show that the treatment worked—at least there is not one report of a patient who felt the need of a second treatment.

Recent research projects have put to rest many long established "facts"—actually myths—about sleep. But still there is little that modern sleep experts agree on. Only one thing is certain, and it can be summed up neatly and almost absurdly: Human beings sleep better when they lie down.

How much sleep do you need?

Aristotle made one of his few unwise pronouncements when he stipulated: "Six hours' sleep for a man, seven for a woman and eight for a fool." The length of your night's sleep is a lot like the size of your belt. If it feels good, it's right.

Work out your own sleep formula

The average sleeping time for adults is seven and a half hours. The fact that you can stay dead to the world for ten hours at a stretch doesn't mean you have to. Vary the length of your sleep for several days at a time, then see how efficiently you operated. Be honest. The right amount of sleep can stretch out your life two ways. You'll stay healthier and probably live longer. And, by eliminating even an hour of needless sleep each night, you'll add about three years of conscious activity over the average life span.

Sleep patterns irregular

Tests show that sleep is generally deepest during the first part of the night, but it does not become progressively lighter toward morning. It oscillates. We go from a deep sleep to a light, dozing stage for ten or fifteen minutes, then plummet downward again.

Can a man survive without sleep?

Nobody can tell you for sure how long you can go without sleep. A test group of laboratory animals lasted twenty days without food and water. Another group died after five days without sleep.

A New York disc jockey recently hit the headlines with a marathon nonsleeping performance. He stayed awake eight and a half days, complained of a slight headache, then went to sleep for 13 hours and 13 minutes. But from tests made during the vigil, there is evidence that the disc jockey was actually grabbing sleep in 30 second snatches, with his eyes open.

We know what happens to the body during sleep. The heart slows, blood pressure drops, blood vessels tend to dilate and the body cools. But for all the wisdom of modern science, we don't know whether these body changes are the cause or the effect of sleep.

To sleep, perchance to dream

Everyone is a dreamer. Some people just don't remember their dreams. Eye movements during sleep have given us strong clues about dreams. When a person is awakened immediately after showing rapid eye movements, he can invariably recall a dream. If he is allowed to sleep for five minutes or so after the movements stop, he frequently forgets all. Dreams occur about four or five times a night, we've learned, and last about fifteen minutes each.

From all indications, the body is relatively motionless during the actual dream, except for rapid eye movements. But when you're not dreaming, twenty to forty changes of position are typical throughout the night.

And so to beds

There are some peasants in a place in Europe who sleep with a pad under their feet instead of their heads. Their feet work harder, they explain. Japanese are more thoughtful. They put pillows under their heads—but the pillows are wooden.

In England, they sell a hydraulically adjustable, electrically heated, mink-covered, tape-recording, vibro-massaging, tea-making, TV-equipped bed, and the blooming thing sells for $7,000. You don't need one.

Bed designs have always been about as wacky as dreams themselves—and they can't be explained any easier.

Rest assured

You can make some sense about mattresses. You can buy firm ones, soft ones, and in-between ones. You can buy good ones, and not so good ones, expensive ones, or moderately priced ones. There is one single, solid criterion of quality—steel innersprings.

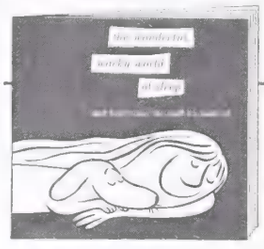
Steel innersprings give you solid comfort, edge to edge—no soft spots, no sagging edges. Every square inch is a full firm sleep surface. Your spine is supported for therapeutic sleep.

You sleep cool on steel innersprings, too. An innerspring mattress permits free circulation of air and lets the mattress breathe and stay fresh.

Here's another happy thought. You can't buy a better, more comfortable mattress than a steel innerspring mattress at any price. So don't lose sleep over the price of a mattress. Rest best . . . buy innersprings.



If you'd like to have a delightful, free book that explains many of the recent findings about sleep and dreams, and gives some helpful pointers about how to buy beds, blankets, sheets, pillows, and mattresses, send the coupon.

herself up decoratively in her new one-room, kitchenette apartment.

She is also enshrined in my "will wonders never cease" department, because I had her pegged as an Early American hooked rug and maple girl but not at all!

"Modern," she demanded succinctly. "I've given away every stick of antiquity I ever inherited. I've sworn I'll never again sit in a Hitchcock chair or dust a grandfather's clock. I am weary to death of having 'roots,' so for the first time in my life, I'm going to live slick, sleek, and up-to-date on the twentieth floor of a brand-new apartment building."

Naturally, an authoritarian like this couldn't be as fuzzy-minded about what she wanted as she let on to be. She'd set her mind on an offbeat olive-green for the walls and shades of gold for the rest of the furnishings. And it soon was clear that she had already foreseen two walls of her big room as teak bookshelves (to be installed, as she carefully pointed out, with brass fittings), and a sofa-bed was to slide under the shelves along each wall. The other two walls, which were virtually all windows, facing east and south, were to be evenly lined with a series of low chests and cabinets, creating a 30-inch-high counter along the walls. These would furnish drawer space for clothes and linen, a desk, a dressing table with a pull-up hinged mirror top, record-player, TV, and even a cellarette.

"I'm a tray-meal-eater," she said, "but when I'm entertaining I can use all that counter as a buffet."

However, she was vague indeed about the patterned fabric she wanted for the draperies, as I discovered many, many showrooms later. She'd brook no florals, no geometrics, no stripes. All she could say was that she wanted something "striking." But we finally struck pay dirt at Lehman-Connor, where I had firmly led her, because I knew that their latest collection had precisely the textured cotton upholstery damask we needed for the sofas and armchairs.

We'd hardly stepped over the door sill when she called out, "This is it!", pointing to a handsome abstract print which was hanging on display—the last thing I should have imagined would take her fancy. It is called "Soliloquy," an indescribable blend of golds, greens, and putty colors, with a 36-inch-wide repeat, and looks like a boldly painted water color.

It is an uncommon fabric, indeed, representing a most unusual printing process. The base fabric, a silky mercerized cotton, is first colored in a soft, misty mottling of pale golds and greens. Then the pattern is printed in opaque pigment on this beautifully color-blurred background. The back of the fabric, almost as lovely as the patterned side, shows you this tonal coloration which looks like the fading-off colors in a warp print.

When the fabric is hung at a window, it "candles," meaning that the light glows through in varying intensity, the heavier pigmented pattern giving the effect of a soft shadow. Striking is the word.

Miss McCracken's abstract pattern, a lovely impression of the Golden Gate Bridge with the hills of Marin County off in the distance, is one of eight similarly processed prints in the Quintessence Group. It includes such diverse designs as a medieval documentary, a Persian pattern, and a variety of large and small-scale floral compositions, all 50 inches wide with the same lovely painted look, and in an artfully styled range of colors that go with each other even if you think they wouldn't.

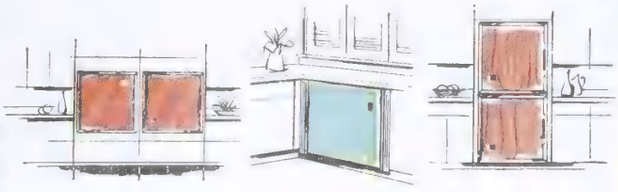
Trend setting kitchens start with Revco Bilt-In Refrigeration

Why are Revco Bilt-Ins most often the refrigeration units selected for today's trend-setting kitchens? It's simply that people who appreciate classic design, and will not compromise good taste, demand Revco.

And this exclusive Revco quality holds true in remodeled kitchens as well as new, because Revco Bilt-Ins are styled to appeal to all decorating tastes and fit perfectly in any age home. It is interesting to note, too, that more and more Revco owners and architects and better builders find this styling lets them use Revco in more and more places. Revco Under Counter installations, for example, are becoming very popular wherever the family entertains—game rooms, family rooms, even sheltered patios.

Of course, the many finishes you may specify—stainless steel, copper-glo, 28 custom colors, even woods that match cabinetry or paneling—make Revco Bilt-Ins even more desirable.

And all Revco units—the incomparable Gourmet® Refrigerator, and the modular Custom Refrigerator or Freezer—permit integration of design that makes it possible to build units in wherever it suits you best and in any combination.



See your Revco dealer soon, he is well qualified to help you plan a trend-setting kitchen for your home.

You'll find Fascinating Ideas at Your Weyerhaeuser 4-SQUARE Lumber Dealer

You'll welcome the refreshing change a Fascinating Idea brings to your home—and to your way of life. This month: a fresh solution to attic expansion, and a family room with specially built-in hobby and activity space! Designs have been carefully developed for easy construction—you'll enjoy wonderfully satisfying results because the rich, natural texture and patterning of Weyerhaeuser 4-Square Lumber and Plywood make the finished job both beautiful and easy to maintain. See your 4-Square Lumber Dealer for ideas and sketches, for helpful building and financing information. And if a new home is the answer to your family's needs, look over his collection of new Weyerhaeuser "Family Planned" homes.

"Every-Member" Family Room!

This "personal area" family room caters to the whims of most everyone. Finished in beautiful Weyerhaeuser 4-Square Paneling, it will prove the most interesting and sought-after room in your home.

Don't Overlook the Attic!

There's space for that extra bedroom . . . for needed storage—in nearly every attic! A good design like this, built of quality Weyerhaeuser 4-Square Products, assures a useful and decorative result.

"Family Planned" for Easy Living!

This Ranch-type home gains individuality by varying typical rectangular design without sacrificing economy of construction. Striking interior—3 bedrooms, 2 baths. Ask to see Design No. 6139.

Free Folder . . . descriptions and drawings of this month's Fascinating Ideas are available free. Stop in at your Weyerhaeuser 4-Square Lumber Dealer. Or write: Weyerhaeuser Company, Dept. H8, Tacoma Building, Tacoma 1, Washington.

U.S. NAUGAHYDE® upholstered over U.S. KOYLON® FOAM

finest in vinyl upholstery — genuine latex foam rubber cushioning

The luxury of light, bright, beautiful color is made completely practical in today's mostly maidless homes with U.S. Naugahyde. Durable Naugahyde needs just a damp cloth to keep its colors fresh and clear as new. This happy-blue living-dining room designed by Frances Duff, A.I.D., shows ideally how well suited Naugahyde is to traditional as well as modern design...and will give you an idea of the wide range of patterns and textures from which you can choose both Elastic U. S. Naugahyde and the new "breathable" U.S. Naugaweave®. And for the ultimate in long-lasting seating comfort, make sure the furniture you buy is cushioned with U.S. Koylon latex foam rubber. It's the world's finest cushioning. You'll find furniture upholstered with Naugahyde and cushioned with Koylon at fine stores throughout the country...or through your decorator.

TAKE IT EASY!

Weather-Station control by Honeywell services heating, air-conditioning, or heating-cooling systems: affords pushbutton or all-automatic control. Below information dials, window notifies when system's filters are dirt-clogged or when system is "ailing." Electric clock pre-sets any day-and-night cycle of temperature setback and restoration. Remote thermostat supplements panel; using extra remotes zones indoor comfort. Correlated outdoor thermostat can also be incorporated. Equipment costs range from $160 for basic unit to $200.

Foldaway food-slicer, a new device, is ideal for small kitchens; carries easily to barbecue site or in picnic hamper to slice foods fresh for serving. Folded, the General Slicing Machine appliance is 14½" x 8½" x 4½"; stores in drawer or in a shelf corner. Handles food bulk up to 8½" long x 5" high; slices hot or cold foods; positive safety control protects fingers from injury. Press lever releases rotary blade for washing; $22.50; all-chrome steel.

U.S. KOYLON FOAM

THE WORLD'S MOST MODERN MATTRESS

Compared with foam, the usual mattress feels like assorted hardware. And U. S. Koylon is more than just foam. It's the finest foam... made with thousands of small cores on BOTH sides. NOT just a skimpy few on one side, like some mattresses. The result is a specially sensitive, solid foam that conforms like water to every curve, yet firmly supports the entire body. And remember! Only a mattress like Koylon with its thousands of cores can be so airy, insuring cleaner, cooler, fresher sleep, far better wear. Koylon is also odorless, non-allergenic; reversible, of course. So be fussy about the foam you buy. Much on the market is more fluff than foam. Be sure to say U. S. Koylon, the Platinum Label in foam. Twin-size U. S. ### READ WHAT OUR CUSTOMERS SAY ABOUT SHILLCRAFT RUGS

Your rugs are all that you advertise and much more. They are a pleasure to make and to own. I know mine when finished will become heirlooms. Thank you. — Mrs. J.J.Q., Columbus, Georgia.

Truly the most beautiful and easily constructed rugs imaginable. However, their real beauty is in their durability.—Mrs. A.E.H., Fairbanks, Alaska.

The Readi-Cut yarn is such an improvement over the kind I had to cut.—Mrs. C., Ilion, New York.

I prefer your hooked rugs above all others. I love the luxurious thickness underfoot. — Mrs. M.M.P., Somerset, Massachusetts.

Your rugs never show any wear and very seldom need cleaning.—Mr. G.C., Scarsdale, New York.

I would like to add that 21 years ago when living in England I purchased from the Readicut factory your Tiger design #413 and this has been in constant use ever since and is in excellent condition, showing little signs of wear. —Mrs. N.B., Dartmouth, N. S., Canada.

Armstrong announces Centennial Cushiontone

...three ceilings that introduce colorful new designs, and soak up noise, too.

RHAPSODY—delicate pattern in subtle cool colors. Brings quiet and beauty to a living room or bedroom.

TAHITI—a flower design in soft pastels . . . a lovely and unusual ceiling for family room or dining room.

Look at the ceiling above. It's called "Autumn Leaves." Its stylized leaf pattern in warm fall colors actually becomes part of the room's decorative scheme.

Now, at last, with Autumn Leaves, Tahiti, or Rhapsody, you can install ceilings with colorful designs, that soak up noise, too. Ceilings especially created to complement today's smartest new colors and fabrics. Ceilings used by professional decorators in all types of rooms with exciting results.

Like all Armstrong acoustical ceilings, Centennial Cushiontone makes your home quieter, more comfortable. Yet an 11′x 14′ ceiling, (all materials), costs only about $52. And it's easier than ever to install with Armstrong's new Brush On Ceiling Cement.

All three Centennial ceilings are now at your lumber dealer's. Go see him tomorrow. For a free ceiling booklet, write Armstrong, 6009 Perry Street, Lancaster, Pa.; in Canada, Dept. 90-9, Box 919, Montreal, P. Q.

Where money matters, Heritage furniture makes sense!

For the timeless design and construction of Heritage furniture your money is well spent—never overspent. Consider the classic, architectural lines of these pieces from the Laureate collection. Only the advanced techniques and cost-saving skills of Heritage craftsmen could give you such beauty and distinction at the price. Of course, you can buy cheaper furniture. But you let yourself in for replacement costs in the future, and you are deprived of the refinement and custom detailing that make Heritage instantly recognizable to people who know fine furniture. Your best measure of lifetime quality and sound value at a proper price is the Heritage name.

See furniture shown, and other Heritage collections, at fine stores throughout the country. Mail fifty cents for extensive booklet—living, dining, bedroom collections—to Heritage Furniture, Inc., Dept. HB-9, High Point, N.C.

HERITAGE

A LIVING TRADITION IN FURNITURE

Schumacher's...is proud to introduce this elegant collection of fabrics. It's most timely too, because the oriental influence is making a more-important-than-ever contribution to the decoration of today's distinctive homes. Each design is an adaptation from an authentic motif found on rare Japanese kimonos, art objects and historic fragments of precious materials. All are available through decorators and decorating departments of fine stores.

martin senour, famed maker of distinctive paints, has masterfully reproduced the subtle "SHIBUI" colors to provide complete harmony. "SHIBUI" paints are available from your Martin Senour dealer, as listed in the Yellow Pages.

Do You Make these Mistakes in ENGLISH?

Louis F. Kemp, A.B. Director

MANY persons say "between you and I" instead of "between you and me"—or use "who" for "whom" or don't know whether to spell certain words with one or two "e's" or "m's" or "r's" or with "ie" or "ei", etc. Mistakes in English reveal lack of education, refinement — prevent you from presenting your thoughts in strongest way. Real command of English will help you reach any business or social goal.

Wonderful Invention

Only 15 minutes a day with Sherwin Cody's famous invention—and you can actually SEE your English improve. It teaches by HABIT—makes it easier to adopt the RIGHT way. Wonderful self-correcting lessons.

FREE BOOK ON ENGLISH. Lack of language power may be costing you thousands of dollars. See what Mr. Cody's method can do for you; it costs you nothing to find out. Write for free book, "How You Can Master Good English in 15 Minutes a Day." It will prove a revelation. WRITE NOW. Sherwin Cody Course in English, 2229 Central Drive, Port Washington, N. Y. ## GUSLE WITH BOW

Imported from Yugoslavia

Fascinating one-string instrument carved in natural dark fruit wood, with horse's head on one end, taut calf hide stretched over its hollow wooden base. 500 years ago traveling bards secretly sang the proud history of the Serbs accompanied by the haunting monotone of the gusle, because the Turkish war lords denied the people the right to education. Today, it makes an original, interesting decoration in any room. 16½" long, 4½" wide. $8.95 ppd.

THE ART OF THE JAPANESE GARDEN

By TATSUO ISHIMOTO, author of The Art of Flower Arrangement, etc. The designing of the Japanese garden is an art that has evolved over 14 centuries. In this new book a famous oriental horticulturist shows you how to combine the basic, traditional Japanese elements of stone, water, simple fencing and permanent planting in your own American garden to create a lovely landscape that will enchant through all seasons, year after year. The 200 exquisite photographs were taken by the author in Japan.

Completely fenced-in garden has lockable gate at street which, in effect, becomes front door of house. In Honolulu, as in residential Japan, tiny lots demand that every inch of space have a function. Hawaiian climate permits garden to be used for active social living in addition to serene, thoughtful relaxation—the cultural function of Japanese gardens.

How Hawaii Has Adapted The Japanese Idea

• Because it has been a melting pot of Occidental, Polynesian, and Oriental cultures for several generations, Hawaii provides many fine examples of how the aesthetic and cultural influences of one nation can be adapted to quite different social and economic conditions without doing them an injustice.

The Japanese influence is strongly apparent in many Hawaiian houses: There is a genuine awareness and respect for natural materials: small garden spaces are fully exploited and integrated with the houses; and beautiful objects are treasured and displayed with taste and restraint. Many specific details have been adopted outright—wide overhangs, ventilated hip roofs, shoji, tokonoma, and sliding exterior wall panels.

But the houses cannot be called Japanese. Like the one shown here, they blend the best from the different cultures and adapt it to the mild Hawaiian climate and the more Occidental way of life.

Openness to the garden so typical of Japanese houses in summer, can be exploited all year in Honolulu where the annual temperature range is roughly 55° to 85°F. Instead of removable-replaceable wall panels, the permanently open lanai has evolved. This is a roofed-over transitional living space between house and garden that is completely open on one side.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY CHARLES YERKES, MAYNARD PARKER STUDIO

Illusion of space outside living-room windows (above) is typically Japanese. Natural fence materials, delicately-scaled foreground planting, open spaces between plants—all increase optical distance between house and fence. Photograph at left shows the actual space between the house and the fence.

Sliding *shoji used for bathroom doors and adjacent grass-cloth-covered sliding closet doors have look and rhythmic modular feeling of Japanese house. In as small a house as this one, they conserve space since they do not swing out into the room. With three door openings around this corner, swinging doors would have to be left closed to be out of the way.

Converted to a tokonoma, bedroom bay window has become an effective alcove for the display of worthy artistic possessions. Selection of contemporary painting and porcelain vase shows how tokonoma principle can suit any beautiful objects. The display of objects this way is typically Japanese, but the setting here has been created out of ordinary American materials.

Learn about Shibui from Japanese Films

Have your film club book some of the great artistic triumphs of Japanese film-making for another insight into the aesthetic quality called shibui

By DONALD RICHIE
Film critic, "The Japan Times"

The special flavor of the great panese movies is so strong that ere is no language barrier, so werfully are moods and atmos-neres evoked.

Only in the past decade have ese movies been available to us, nd these ten years have seen the nergence of an easily recognizle Japanese film style, as clear in s way as "Hollywood," "French," nd "Italian" styles are in theirs.

The content of the Japanese film not very different from that of lms in other countries. There are apanese "Westerns," chase films, mances, slapstick comedies, slice-
-life films, and so on. But while ollywood dotes on action and the uropean film is strongest in charter delineation, the Japanese film richest in mood and atmosphere.

Atmosphere is created through gid selectivity. Just as the Japnese create their own favorite ome atmosphere of faintly elegiac erenity with a hanging scroll and few flowers, so their films create unique quality using only the implest means.

This quality is shibui, the austery which becomes elegance simply hrough its calculated, controlled onesty and its supreme assurance.
o be sure, many films incorporate nly the hade, that antonym which ight best be rendered by the Eng-sh "loud." Yet you will know the hibui when you see it in the films f Japan.

As a simple example, what one kes in the often praised Gate of Iell is nothing more or less than ie color, that marvelous color that reates the atmosphere through hich the characters swim. And what impresses one is that—alone in cinema history—Japan uses restraint as a principle in color photography.

Despite bright colors, no one remembers Gate of Hell as being blazing, for the bright colors are in small ratio to the quieter colors. The characteristic shibui color depends, in painting, poetry, or cinema, entirely upon context.

The elliptical quality of so many Japanese films, their unwillingness to define, their inclination to the allusive, is attributable to the shibui principle at work. The elegant economy of a film like Ugetsu (in which the major theme—and irony—is never stated in the subtle parallel between the demon-wife, damned back to life for lack of love, and the real wife, damned to death for lack of love) is one such example. Or the prodigality of inference in Rashomon, in which all values are questioned, the end result being that questioning itself is the single affirmation. All these famous films are controlled by this peculiarly Japanese passion for understating, for suggesting, for the bare beauty of the simple allusion.

Not, indeed, that this is the rule for all Japanese films. The blatantly obvious is almost equally common, but it is not a quality uniquely Japanese. Nor does that amorphous term, shibui, always mean the same thing. A secondary but quite important meaning, indeed, the garden-variety meaning in Japan, is that shibui means sour, as a lemon is sour; it means astringent; it means something that refreshes through its own slight unpleasantness. The films directed by Ozu combine these various meanings of shibui into an experience purely Japanese.

One of the masterpieces of Japanese cinema, the 1932 I Was Born But, has what we would ordinarily think an unpleasant theme: two little boys, new to their neighborhood, find they can beat up the boy next door, who is the son of their father's boss. They discover their father placating the boss, giving in on all points, and they cannot understand why he must do so. In the end they have accepted this most bitter fact of life.

This is the theme: but upon it Ozu has lavished a wealth of detail and has made his own perspective one of humor. It is an extremely funny film about a very serious subject. One laughs at each telling detail, and one is cleansed —a kind of catharsis occurs during an hour and a quarter of attention to the tiny, silent screen.

This quality of the shibui then, this extreme selection from the most personal of perspectives, is predicated upon something larger. It rests on and is derived from a oneness with nature which, in Japan and in the Japanese film, reconciles opposites and finds nourishment in the facts of life as the Japanese observe them.

This would account for that most notorious of Japanese film institutions, the unhappy ending, almost insisted upon by people to whom 'death' is not a dirty word. And this quality, too, has a name: it is called mono no aware, a term variously translated, perhaps most successfully by 'sympathetic sadness.' It implies that the world will go on and that mutability, change, the evanescence of all things yield their elegiac satisfactions; that, as with environment, one lives with, not against it.

There is a beautiful example of this in an Ozu film, the 1949 Late Spring. At the end of the picture the daughter, who has been living with her father, gets married. We know that she has finally gone only because the last scene shows the father alone. He is peeling a pear and carefully turns the fruit round in his hands. His movements become slower and slower until he stops and looks around the room. The room is vacant, but we are not shown this. Rather we are shown only his vacant glance, and thus we know. Then, not permitting himself even a sigh, the father begins again to peel the fruit. We know what will happen after the picture ends: he will continue, his serenity maintained.

Man and his surroundings make the continual theme of the Japanese film, and it quite accurately reflects the Japanese on his crowded archipelago where one overt move creates a friction affecting dozens. It also reflects the oneness with nature that constitutes both the triumph and the escape of the Japanese people.

The Japanese regards his surroundings as an extension of himself, and in films this creates the atmosphere of the Japanese picture at its best.

PHOTOGRAPH FROM BRANDON FILMS, INC.

A wealth of meaning is contained in the questioning, severe look of the man and the downcast gaze of the woman who cannot or will not meet his eyes. The shibui principle of extreme restraint is at work in this famous Japanese film, The Men Who Tread on the Tiger's Tail, which was made in 1945.

Take, for example, The Maid, the story of a girl from the mountains who comes to Tokyo to work for a city family, and who finally returns to her mountains. Here the atmosphere is created by using real houses and real suburbs. Many—indeed, most—Japanese films contain at least a few location shots, taken in actual places. The reason is that it is cheaper. The result is an atmosphere impossible to create in the studio.

Another example is Kurosawa's The Drunken Angel, where atmosphere is made to comment upon and explain character. These people in their ruined postwar world are both created and controlled by their landscape of ruins, piles of garbage, and scum-covered ponds. This studio-constructed décor is controlled with such selectivity that the atmosphere, a stifling day on the city dump, is all but palpable.

Or, the more recent Human Condition, where China during the Japanese occupation becomes the protagonist, the field that both moves and controls the characters. Or Ikiru, that marvelously detailed document of man triumphing over the very environment that has created him.

In films such as these, the meaningful austerity that is high art—the Japanese call it shibui—is forced to its extreme limits. Yet not once does shibui appear merely functional. Rather, it represents all we need, really, to know about life. And perhaps, this is the real meaning of the term shibui.

All of the films mentioned in this article can be seen, no matter where you live, no matter how far you are from an "art movie" theatre, if you belong to or organize a film club. Rental costs vary according to the length of film and the size of audience. To learn how to organize a film club see HOUSE BEAUTIFUL for July, 1957.

An American vacation house that recalls Japan

● Set in Big Sur, an elemental stretch of coastal California, is this beautifully-roofed summer residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Hudson. Although it is Japanese in appearance (every piece of roof tile was imported from Japan), this is basically an American hunting lodge and retreat for the owners.

Why did the Hudsons decide to go Japanese in the visual sense? First, appropriateness. This particular setting witnesses each day the vagaries of nature. Wonderful, bright sunny days are suddenly turned mysterious by the onrush of thick, rolling fog banks. Often. by sunset, the fog dissipates and a spectacular evening ensues. There is much here that reminds one of the many landscape scenes painted for centuries by the Japanese artists. In such (Please turn the page)

Nature's materials are exploited to the fullest in this house. Weathered woods are enjoyed, and no fuss is made in trying to keep things looking new.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MORLEY BAER

Fog-shrouded setting for this Japanesque summer house could be in Japan itself but is actually the California coast. This quiet little lake was enlarged by the Hudsons as a haven for ducks and swans and as a visual contrast to the magnificence and grandeur of the Pacific Ocean and the rugged Big Sur terrain. Although nature remains in control, man has found small ways to manipulate the environment.

The white paint used on the beam ends protects the wood and calls attention to the double-course rafter technique that is used by Architects Walker and Moody to support the roof. The Hudsons live in this house six months each year and spend much time walking or hunting in the hills.

a setting this lovely slate gray roof gleams like a jewel. In addition to its "feeling" right, a big roof is an absolute necessity in Big Sur country. From late fall through spring, the 65-mile strip is hit by big wind-and-rain storms. A house must be able to take a beating and still be fit to live in.

Each material in this house was selected for its lasting quality and its ability to look better with age.

Roof drip-strip displays a collection of carefully chosen water-washed pebbles. Taking advantage of the opportunity to look closely at nature's components, as is done here, is part of the lesson we can learn from Japan.

Natural stone fireplace in the living room acts as a partition between it and the bedroom. At the back of the fireplace behind the burning logs is a leaded glass screen. This allows the Hudsons to enjoy the fire from their bedroom. Scanning the horizon is a favorite pastime in this rugged country, and the big telescope can be used either on the deck or indoors.

A touch of Japan is seen in these carved wood swinging doors at the entrance to Mrs. Hudson's dressing room. Gleaming floors are concrete with integral color.

Morning sun streams onto the lakeside terrace. In the foreground under the overhang of the roof, is a long buffet table which can be filled and cleared directly from the kitchen through large sliding windows. At the far end of this terrace is a Hawaiian type of sofa called a hikiée.

Time on your hands

It's an event when a few extra hours or even an extra day turn up unexpectedly on a traveler's itinerary, but when they do, here are some choice ways to put them to good use

By MARION GOUGH

● One thing all travelers are agreed upon—there never seems to be enough time. And yet, as occasionally happens, when a few extra hours or even a whole extra day come at you out of the blue, you can fritter away this bonanza wondering what to do with it.

One of the things you can do—if you have the self-discipline to do it—is to hang the ne pas derangez sign on the doorknob of your hotel room and use the time to catch up on lost sleep. Not as witless a procedure as it may sound! Some of the most hep travelers we know plan "sleep" days into their itinerary as insurance against the physical and mental fatigue that comes from trying to see and do too much too fast.

But since most of us don't feel we're getting our money's worth out of travel unless we're up and about, here are a few ways to turn a few extra hours to good advantage.

In New York, with some time on your hands, you might take a 35-minute jaunt around (Please turn to page 116)

Home-wide Telephone Convenience

How often you use your telephone! Countless times a day it helps you plan social engagements, shop for goods and services, keep in touch with friends and family.

And because the telephone is so useful to everyone, extension phones should be handy throughout your home, in locations planned to fit your family's needs.

Put them in your most lived-in areas—kitchen, living room, library, the bedrooms, downstairs in the game room—wherever a phone should be within easy reach.

This is telephone convenience that's comfortably home-wide, and it doesn't cost much to enjoy. Extension phones, of course, are available in your choice of many decorator colors. To order, just call or visit your Bell Telephone business office.

Greenwich Village, through Washington Square, MacDougal Street and arty environs, aboard the Village Choo-Choo. It runs every hour from 1:00 P. M. to 8:00 P. M., compliments of Albert French Restaurant, 42 East 11th Street, its point of departure.

Lots of New Yorkers themselves don't know that one of the most grandiose views of the town, including the UN Building and Plaza, Long Island City and Brooklyn, is from the little cocktail terrace on top of the Beekman Tower, 3 Mitchell Place, at East 49th Street, open from 4:00 P. M. to 12:30 A. M. Go for a half hour of sunset or mauve twilight, for New York's glamorous lighting-up time or its diamond-lighted black velvet night. No meals are served.

Just five cents

Still the most exciting half-hour's worth in New York and certainly the biggest travel bargain in the country (5¢) is the ferry ride from South Ferry to St. George, Staten Island, with an incredible close-up of Manhattan's sky line, the Statue of Liberty, the harbor, and the Narrows.

Once on Staten Island you can make an adventure of this excursion by taking the bus to Richmond and visiting the Jacques Marchais Tibetan Museum and Monastery—the last thing you'd expect to find within ferrying distance of Wall Street, which makes this outing all the more entrancing. Museum is open Tuesdays and Thursdays 3:00 P. M. to 5:00 P. M., and the second and fourth Sundays of the month from 3:00 P. M. to 5:00 P. M. On Sunday there is a 25¢ admission. Closed January and February.

Shopping or window shopping anywhere is an obvious hour's diversion—educational, too, because the wares in the shops and the attitudes of the salespeople give you a good line on the kind of society you're visiting.

In London, spend a rewarding hour in the emporium of that British institution, Fortnum & Mason's, 181 Piccadilly, where the salesmen wear winged collars and act more like decorous ushers at a wedding than purveyors of everything from potted jams to cashmere.

At Marshall & Snelgrove on Oxford Street you can lose yourself in the mannerly atmosphere of the by-gone carriage-trade specialty shop—the kind of place where your grandmother always bought her linens, and still a stronghold of fine quality and conservative style in woolen, linen, and crystal.

A leisurely stroll along the shops on High Holborn and Kensington High Street can be a field day for lovers of Georgian silver and antiques in general.

(Note: The Association of Kensington High Street merchants is putting on an Antique show in the Town Hall, Kensington High Street, August 25 through September 8. Admission about 30¢.)

Or hie yourself over to the auction rooms at Christie's, 8 King Street, St. James's, or Southby's, 34 New Bond Street. Or for a fabulous eyeful of antique silverware, visit the "Silver Vaults" on Chancery Lane. The most famous are at William Walter Inc. Others are Percy's and Julius Golding.

For a lively, carnival-type, thoroughly good-humored Sunday morning (nine to noon) and a wonderful brush with East End Londoners, mingle with the crowds and listen to the pitchmen in Petticoat Lane, London's flea market, which actually centers on Middlesex Street and sprawls over a whole neighborhood, with open-air stalls and push-cart sales of everything from grab-bag chances to furniture.

For an hour or so of local color, especially on Sunday afternoon, drop into The Star in Belgrave Mews, a congenial pub and restaurant, with a U-shape stand-up bar, Mrs. Kennedy presiding. The place counts lots of movie and diplomatic-corps people among its loyal habitues.

Or try a seafood meal at Scott's in Piccadilly, the only counter restaurant we ever heard of where you get the full treatment of linen-crystal-and-silver and 36-inch linen napkins along with fish soup, lobster, wine, and Stilton cheese.

Or to get a taste of London's answer to existentialism go to the little restaurant next to the Basil Street Hotel, off Sloane Street near Knightsbridge, where the specialties are low-cost omelettes and espresso coffee on California-type wood tables, and clientele who are chiefly young West-Side Londoners, long on conversation, short on pocket money.

Some people think you can pass the time with the most fun and the least expense in the restaurants of Chelsea, where the posh, the Bohemian, the Continental and the Cockney rub elbows happily, and the food represents a variety of national cuisines. At the Fox and

Not one, but 4 Garlic Dressings no one can buy

...make one tonight with this GOOD SEASONS MIX

Good Seasons Garlic Dressing. Light and fresh, with an herb-spice base and a gentle flavor of garlic. A French-restaurant type of dressing! Takes just seconds to mix. Easy directions are on the Good Seasons envelope. You combine your favorite oil, vinegar and a little water with the Mix. The water, or a substitute liquid, makes the blend smoother. (A continental chef's secret!) You can use many substitutes, vary the dressing to your own special taste. See the recipes below for delicious suggestions.

Garlic Dressing with Light Curry. To make this, substitute sour cream or mayonnaise for the water in the Good Seasons Dressing. Just before final shaking, add ½ teaspoon curry. The curry flavor is light, but new and tempting with greens. Excellent in cole slaw, chicken or potato salads, too.

Fruit-Nut Garlic Dressing. Instead of water, use pineapple juice. Optional last touch: 2 tablespoons of slivered, toasted almonds. Another fine variation uses orange juice instead of water and adds chopped pecans. Either dressing is delightful on fruit salad.

Tomato-Garlic Dressing for Spinach Salad. Hearty and bright-flavored. Substitute tomato sauce, juice, chili sauce or catsup for the water. Perks up all greens, sea food or cottage cheese salads. And do try it with a tossed salad that includes raw spinach, sprinkles of crisp bacon and sieved, hard-cooked egg. A favorite with dad!

An old story

–being told again

At least three waves of Japanese influence have washed over America in the last hundred years. But all of them passed, leaving in their wake only odd, unassimilated manifestations such as replicas of teahouses where no tea was ever served.

A new wave of interest in the aesthetic side of Japan has been building up during the last few years. This time it promises to be more perceptive. More Americans have actually been in Japan, and we have begun to learn what lies behind the engaging superficialities. We have begun to understand the basic principles.

This time we may get both the words and the tune. Unless we do, the new Japanese influence will once more be a passing fad that will soon play itself out.

What are the basic principles and how can they be absorbed into American life? To answer this question, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL presents an issue showing the ways in which Japan's influence is taking root in our soil.

As seen from the auto court, this house has the modesty and lack of pretentiousness characteristic of Japanese houses. It has no great portico or other device calculated to be impressive. Gates, opening into a more private court (a transition—and a separator—between street and living areas), are marked by a roof sheltering the approach to the entrance.

Lessons we are learning from Japan

By CURTIS BESINGER

After these many years we are beginning to appreciate and understand some of the basic principles of Japanese architecture

● An American naval officer forced Japan to open her gates to the Western world more than a hundred years ago. The American people, in general, received their first glimpse of things Japanese at the Philadelphia Exposition of 1876. To them these things were all exotic, strangely picturesque, and incomprehensible. Until more recently this has been something of our attitude toward Japan. Our appreciation of Japanese art and architecture has been largely limited to its picturesque and seemingly quaint qualities.

We have had passing passions for miniature gardens, paper parasols, and lanterns, and sitting on the floor. We have gone through several periods in which the Japanese "look" was the rage. But our understanding of Japanese architecture, which is more a way of living than a way of building, has been extremely limited.

There have been a few notable exceptions among us, but they, too, were long regarded as equally incomprehensible exotics, although American. The Greene brothers in California showed a great understanding of the beauty of construction that characterizes Japanese architecture. They built great residences as proof of their understanding. And Frank Lloyd Wright throughout his long career was deeply sympathetic with the thought and spirit that motivates Japanese architecture.

There is now good evidence that our attitude is changing. This house and the several houses on the pages that follow indicate that our preoccupation with the exotic aspects of Japanese architecture is beginning to fade and that some more general and genuine appreciation of the lessons of Japanese architecture, as they may apply to our way of living, is replacing it.

We are now ceasing to be fascinated with imitating appearances and beginning to understand the principles behind these appearances. Any beneficial products of a cross-pollination of cultures needs a period of assimilation to be effective. Something may appeal to us simply because it is unfamiliar and unknown; we may imitate it without understanding. The learning process very often begins with imitation: it may eventually grow into understanding.

We are now learning that a Japanese house is the product of a particular set of conditions: sociological, geographical, climatic, etc. Although it may appear impractical and unrealistic to our minds and highly aesthetic to our eyes, it is, within the context of its origin, highly rational and realistic. It is more rational, for example, than some of our "Hansel and Gretel cottages" (Please turn the page)

The quiet dignity of the entrance gates demonstrates a principle which we of the West are beginning to understand: that understatement and restraint in the use of materials can be much more effective than the most lavish and opulent display.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

The outer gates, when open, allow an inviting view of the entrance doors beyond. Although not as concealed, nor as indirect, as the approach to an entrance often is in Japan, there is a similarity in the thought-out and prepared transition here.

The value and importance of high-quality craftsmanship are recognized and appreciated in this residence, as in Japan. Such recognition gives personal satisfaction to the craftsman and helps to encourage a higher quality of workmanship.

The entrance garden, seen when one comes through the gateway shown on the preceding pages, introduces a different atmosphere. The main entrance doors are at the right. At the left is the entrance to the servants' living area. The stone base beneath the wood column is a device often used in Japan to protect it from dampness and other causes of deterioration.

The entrance court serves as a buffer zone and a pleasant transition between the house and street

The view from within the entrance hall toward the gate which opens to the auto court. The garden seen in the photo above is at the right. Although the auto court is conveniently near and can be reached under shelter, the cars cannot be seen from the living areas. This is a highly successful solution to the annoying problem of what to do with the intrusion of automobiles into our more immediate home environment.

The entrance hall is one step in the gradual and somewhat indirect transition that introduces a person to the living area. The Japanese consider an abrupt and direct approach uninteresting—and uncivil. The sliding doors at the left lead to the garden room. Doors to the entrance garden are at the right. Coat closets are behind panels at center of photo.

Lights concealed behind grillwork in this ceiling recess in entrance hall provide a soft, subdued light, typical of the Japanese liking for modulated light without harsh contrasts.

with their search for cute effects or some of our intellectual and uninhabitable abstractions in glass and metal.

This house, designed by Gardner Dailey, for Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Ford, is non-assertive and withdrawn, as seen from the street. The only claim to attention that is made is the marking of the entrance gate by the roof covering the entrance walk. Most Western visitors to Japan are struck by this lack of assertion in the general scene and regard it as an absence of architecture. Except in areas where Western influence has been accepted, only a few of the major monuments stand out to claim our attention.

As the American scene becomes more and more filled with buildings attempting to make "strong statements," each of them clamoring for our attention, we begin to appreciate the value of non-assertion. (Please turn the page)

The garden room, seen from the entrance hall, has courtyards on both sides (see plan and photos on opposite page). It was planned for the close contact with the garden that is enjoyed in a Japanese house; the gardens are a part of the room. Sliding panels at the opposite end of the room close to give privacy to the foyer of the master suite seen through opening.

The competition for our attention is producing a jangling chaos in which even an important statement must compete to be heard.

In this noisy chaos the serenity of this house with its spirit of inner calm has real human value. One becomes aware of this value as he approaches the gates and enters the quiet entrance garden.

Although their residential streets are less assertive than ours and have less automobile traffic, the Japanese appreciate the importance of a transitional area between the street and the living areas. They surround themselves with a fence and a buffer zone, even though the space of the latter may be small.

They also delight in indirectness of approach, which is present as much in their social practice as in their site planning. Our directness, our "coming straight to the point," is incomprehensible to them. The route to their living areas is not a straight line. They feel that the shielded and deflected path is more interesting and human. Although the approach to this house is not as indirect as the Japanese might prefer, it has some of this quality of indirection. One passes through a gate, then through doors, then turns to enter the garden room (Please turn to page 193)

From the court adjoining the living room you look through the garden room into the opposite court. This shows the open quality of the garden room and how the courts are very much a continuation of it, a translation into our terms of an idea common in Japan. Bamboo shades soften light from openings.

The main elements of the plan (the servants' wing, the general living area, and the more private area of the master wing) are casually organized around and separated by three courtyards. The court that adjoins the living room opens on one side to a wide view of the surrounding countryside. The two others are completely surrounded either by walls or by the enclosed portions of the house. All the major living areas open into these courts so that one can walk directly into a garden. This interweaving of outdoor and indoor spaces gives the owners their desired close association with the outdoors.

The private garden court into which both the garden room and the master bedroom open is bounded by a raised band of planting, but its main feature is a mosaic-like paving (photo at right) with varied textures: brick, cobblestones, exposed-aggregate concrete, and a pebble collection set in concrete.

The portico marking the passage from the auto court to the entrance is quietly unimposing. White paint on rafter ends is a decorative protection for vulnerable end grain of wood.

How Americans are using Japanese ideas

This house in California illustrates many of the ways in which we are adapting the ideas in the Japanese house to our pattern of life

● Ideas in architecture exist at many levels of significance and importance. Since we are not Japanese, we probably cannot completely understand and appreciate the "big idea" in a Japanese house. We are not conditioned physically, mentally, or spiritually to live in the Japanese manner. But we are prepared to accept and to understand many of their ideas and to adapt them to our way of living.

This house is an illustration of how one man has done this. A quick examination of the pictures and a casual acquaintance with Japan will tell you that he doesn't attempt to live in a Japanese manner. Nor is his house built as that of a Japanese would be. It does, however, incorporate much that is Japanese in idea and in feeling.

The incorporation of these stems from Mr. Stout's interest in and enthusiasm for the art and culture of Japan. An indication of the depth of this (Text continues on page 131)

The garden court, at the left as one approaches the entrance, achieves a maximum effect with a minimum means: a vivid spot of color seen amid gravel, rocks, and stepping stones.

The brush drawing above the chest was made by the owner and indicates his great interest in Japan and its ideas. He has studied and acquired skill in calligraphy and sumi painting.

The entrance hall, with its rug-covered floor, is preceded by the contrasting pebble pavement of the vestibule (close-up at right). Hand-worked door is typical of craftsmanship in house.

The floor of the entrance vestibule is paved with black pebbles and a few larger, flat stones, set in concrete. The result is a surface that is both interesting and practical.

In the dining room a rug patterned after tatami is handsomely set-off by the gleam of the black-stained oak floor. Two six-panel screens decorate the walls. Oriental antique chests are used for storing linens and silver. The ceiling is similar in construction to that of a Japanese residence. The living room is seen beyond the opening.

The open fireplace in the photo at right is similar in idea but not in construction to those found in the center of the kitchens of Japanese farm houses. Theirs have some device to support cooking utensils instead of a smoke hood. A telescoping stack allows raising or lowering of this hood if desired.

The living room is arranged with an asymmetrical placing of elements, preferred by the Japanese. It is carefully furnished with many fine Oriental works of art. Lacquer trunks with gold medallions are used as small coffee tables. Near the center of the upper photo, at the entrance into the living room, is the tokonoma (alcove) with its characteristic tokobashira, a column made of a tree trunk with only the bark removed. The cabinet at its left is shown in greater detail in photographs on page 133.

The master bedroom, a multi-purpose room, is an American interpretation of a Japanese room, which serves many purposes. It is used as a home office, a sitting room, and a studio for the practice of brush drawing, as well as a bedroom. The sleeping alcove, seen in photo below, is at right of photo.

The sleeping alcove is separated from the study-sitting area by pairs of sliding shoji. When these panels are closed, concealing the bed, the room is more appropriately in character for use as a home office. Shoji are also used at the windows of the alcove. Tatami-like rug is used throughout the house.

interest is the fact that he has studied and acquired some proficiency in the technique of calligraphy and of brush painting. This skill is not mastered quickly or easily, even by the Japanese! He owns a fine collection of Oriental furnishings and works of art, both Japanese and Chinese, which he has used in the furnishing of his house.

It is as a background for these interests that the house was designed and built. Since the idea of mutual harmony and inter-relatedness is so basic to Japanese art and thought, it understandably follows that his house should provide a sympathetic environment and setting for these interests.

A basic element of the Japanese house is the tatami floor mat, which serves as a unit of measure. It is the basis of organization and determines the size and proportions of all spaces. The black lines of its binding form an over-all grid pattern according to which the rooms are sized and elements of the structure are located. Here, as in Japan, this linear grid serves only as a disciplining and unifying element and not as a restriction. (Please turn the page)

The bath and dressing room are American in planning but Japanese in atmosphere. The walls are covered with grass cloth. Ceilings are woven rush mats supported on bamboo poles. The shower alcove is at the right. Note the high windows between the ceiling and the wide mirror over lavatory counter.

The wall of the living room, seen when one enters the room, is opened to a veranda and a view of rolling hills. Typical of many of the outer walls in the house, it is divided into a band of sliding doors, shielded with light-modulating shoji and a horizontal plaster band, punctuated with openings.

Remarkable freedom can be achieved within its seemingly restricting limits. Regular tatami are not used in this house, only the idea they represent. Their soft straw surface is easily dented and broken by the hard heels of our shoes. In their place are rugs woven with the color and texture of tatami and the characteristic lines of measure.

These lines are reflected in the dark-stained wood, inside and out, that divides the light plaster walls into rhythmic panels, defines the weight-bearing structure of the house and forms openings for windows and doors. This architectural grammar of dark-stained structure and contrasting plaster infilling is typical of the architecture of Japan.

The module is also reflected in the linear pattern of the shoji used at the windows in place of curtains or draperies. The shoji, another basic element of the Japanese house, are placed inside the sliding glass sash here and produce the soft, modulated light found in Japanese interiors. This particular light was an essential element in the original environment of Japanese works of art: it is this light, free from harsh contrasts, that best reveals their art.

Since the shoji are a standard height, determined by the human figure, they are an element giving human scale to the architecture of Japan. Even in monuments and in large spaces their height remains constant. Any desired variation in ceiling height is gained by a variation in the width of the band between the top of the shoji and the ceiling. This quality of scale and this (Please turn the page)

Seen from the outside at night, the shoji glow with diffuse light like a paper lantern. Pleasing by night or day, shoji are used here instead of draperies to control light and vision. Note how the decorative spot in the bottom panel of central screen door helps remove the ordinary look of screen doors.

A handsome cabinet, enclosed with fusuma, divides the living room into two areas: the informal area around the open fireplace and the more formal area. The fusuma used on the side of the cabinet next to the formal area are not decorated (photo above). In addition to the beauty of the wood panels the chief feature of the cabinet on this side is the intricately carved central panel in the grillwork above the panels.

Behind the central fusuma of the cabinet is a bar (with a small sink, shelves for glasses above counter, and storage for liquor below) accessible from both sides. Linens are stored on shelves behind the panels at one end; at the other end is the radio and music reproduction equipment. The speakers are back of grillwork at sides of central panel.

Two fusuma with painted panels are used on the side of cabinet next to the informal seating area around the open fire. These panels are also painted on the opposite side and this decoration is seen as a background for the bar (photo above) when the cabinet is opened to the more formal living area.

The ceiling construction in many of the rooms of the house is similar to that of Japanese houses. Overlapped strips of one-quarter-inch ash plywood resting on redwood 3 x 3's suspended from the roof construction, were used here to achieve this particular character: the rhythmic lines of supports spaced upon the module of the tatami, the cross rhythm of the lines of overlap, and the beauty of natural wood grain.

Below the kitchen window with its typical Japanese grille (photo above) and at the left of the service entrance (left photo) is a small garden, an arrangement of an antique well head, a few plants, and several large stones. Small, carefully composed gardens like this are found often in Japan.

The service entrance (seen from entrance garden, upper photo) is located conveniently near the auto court and in the passage leading to the main entrance. The wall of stained redwood boards enclosing the raised platform conceals any packages delivered or the garbage cans awaiting removal. At the foot of the few steps up to the platform is a fumi-ishi (lower photo), a stepping stone for the removal of shoes. Placed level with the pebble concrete paving, divided with redwood strips, it is more decorative here than functional.

characteristic band around the top of the room is present in this house, particularly in the outer walls. Here, as is very often done in Japan, the plaster panels above the openings have been decoratively punctuated with openings for light and ventilation.

The linear quality of the module is also repeated in the wood members that support the ceilings, constructed in a Japanese manner with an overlay of thin boards or woven mats. It is found again in the fusuma, the panels sometimes used in Japan for sliding partitions between rooms but used here for doors on the cabinet separating the living room into areas for formal and informal living.

The discipline of adherence to the tatami grid as a design unit produces an over-all simplicity and coherence. This, combined with the feeling that a house should quietly and unassumingly take its place in the natural order and in the natural scene, produces houses with the kind of meditative calm and repose which this house has. An idea of co-operative inter-relatedness, instead of our Western idea of domination and subordination, determines the relation of a Japanese house to the landscape and of the parts of the house to each other. It produces, as Bruno Taut wrote, a design in which "the various elements group themselves together like an agreeable company of free and independent people connected as to their individual characters, but not obliged to follow a given order."

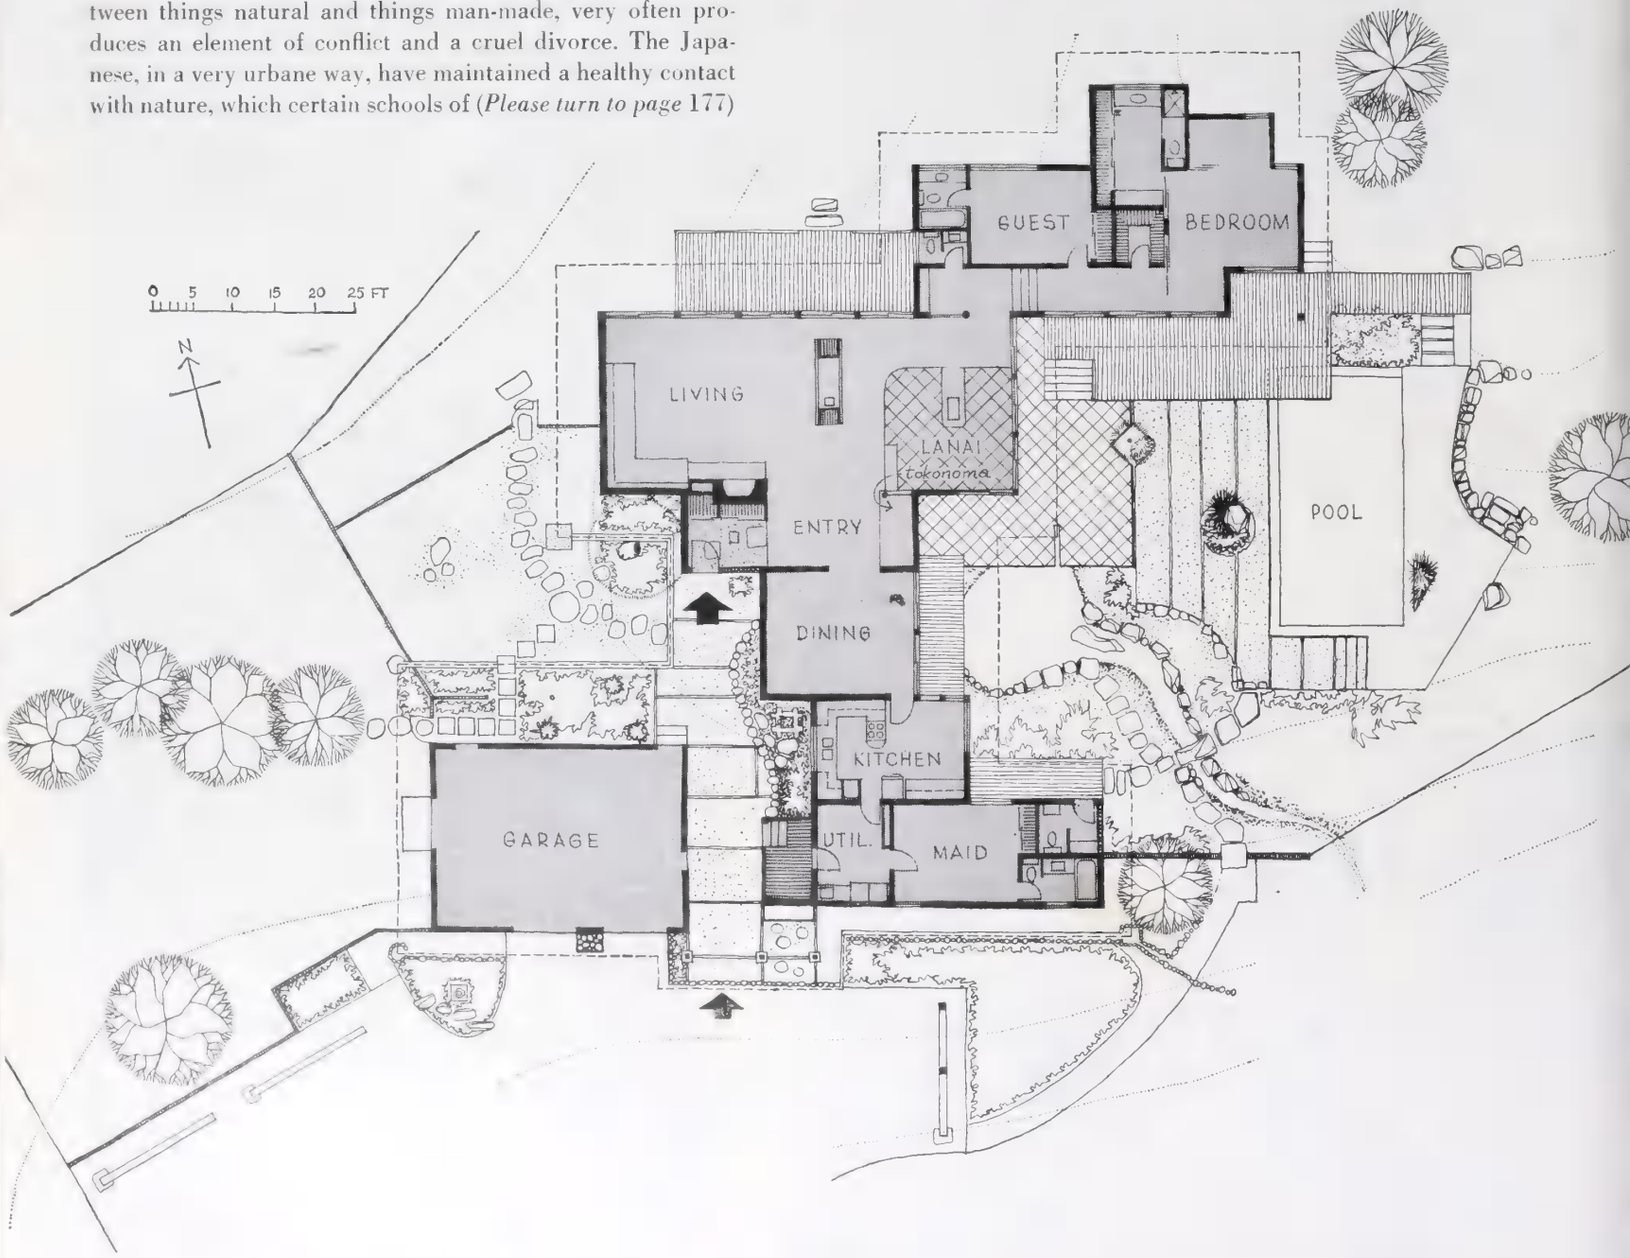
This house has this particular idea in it, both in its general form and in its relation to the surrounding landscape. What one sees from a distance is similar to a large Japanese farm house, a rather (Please turn the page)

The kitchen has windows (seen in opposite photo) so placed that a person working here has a view of the entrance way. The light fixture above the sink, enclosed with frosted glass, supplies general illumination for the room as well as for this work area. Kitchen cabinets are custom-built with vertical-grain Douglas fir plywood. Dining room is at right.

In the master bedroom, sliding panels that are works of art in themselves are used to conceal the controls for lighting. This kind of thoughtful consideration for nicety in even the smallest details is present throughout this house. It is also a characteristic of the Japanese house. In it no detail is too small or too unimportant not to be carefully worked out.

Most of the interior walls of the house are either papered with grass cloth, as seen at left, or are white-coat plaster with rice straw mixed in and exposed (above), giving the surface a texture flecked with golden color. The interior wood is vertical grain Douglas fir, stained. Note the ornament-headed nail used here to join the horizontal and vertical members.

spontaneous and happy association of roofs. One's chief impression is that of sheltering forms in the landscape. An element of picturesqueness is produced by this practical utility, although there is no attempt in this direction. Simple dignity is present without any effort to be impressive.



Since the form of the Japanese house is derived more from the pattern of the life within it and an adaptation to climatic conditions rather than from predetermined concepts of "form for form's sake," the house has no rigid axis of organization or any dominant center of gravity. It has a kind of center that moves wherever its occupants are at the time.

A Japanese house, in a sense, has no front, back, or sides. As in this house, rooms are placed for the best advantage; they may face into garden courts or toward the countryside.

The Japanese house is not self-contained; there is no separation between house and landscape. There is, however, a kind of clear distinction between constructed and natural forms, but these forms have met, are mutually compatible and happily married. This is an idea which more of our modern American architecture could recognize and use. The desire for clarity in our buildings, for maintaining a distinction between things natural and things man-made, very often produces an element of conflict and a cruel divorce. The Japanese, in a very urbane way, have maintained a healthy contact with nature, which certain schools of (Please turn to page 177)

Located in rolling countryside, the house, as seen from the road, has the rambling and freely organized character of a Japanese farmhouse. The front wall and doors of the garage, at left, are faced with random-width redwood bean poles. Entrance portico, shown on page 126, is near center of photo.

The loosely-knit, asymmetrical plan is shaped, as Japanese houses are, by the patterns of life within the house and by their inter-relationship with the natural world. It has no fixed center or rigid axis. It is not formal or self-contained. It has a more freely co-operative kind of order, an interplay of elements. Some rooms face the semi-enclosed court with the swimming pool. Others have views over the surrounding countryside. Note how the entrance passage opens at the left into an enclosed garden that comes as a pleasant interlude in the approach to the house. See photograph on page 127.

In Japanese architecture, the roofs, the element of shelter, are dominant. They are roofs that blend quietly into the natural scene. Similar blending can also be seen in the garden design in the way a transition is effected between the highest level in the foreground and the court in the background: a stepping down of levels—veranda to pool to court.

The semi-enclosed garden court, around which the house wraps with a protective gesture, is largely surfaced, for use and for ease of maintenance, with precast concrete tile, pebble concrete, loose gravel, and stones. Design, in the Japanese manner, has produced an easy meeting and transition between constructed and man-made form and natural forms of planting.

The Morse house reflects, but by no means copies, the clean combination of brown thatch and white walls so often seen in Japanese country houses, like the famous Katsura Palace. Its roof is red cedar shakes; its walls, cement plaster. The rambling conformation of the pitched, slightly curving roof and overhangs is reminiscent of Japanese temple compounds.

The difference between Assimilation and Imitation

By MARION GOUGH

● Look to Hawaii and the West Coast, the two Orient-facing areas of the U. S. A., for incontrovertible evidence that Japan has already had a significant influence on American living. In Hawaii, where 40 per cent of the population is of Japanese origin, it would be curious indeed if something of Japan's culture had not made itself felt in the course of 100 years. And it is only to be expected that our Orient-exposed West Coast countrymen should have a keener awareness of Japanese design than the rest of us who are, in a sense, only beginning to discover Japan.

What is most important to observe is how the influence of Japan has made its mark. It has been no mere matter of imitating ornament and superimposing it on the American landscape. What has happened is that certain characteristics of Japanese architectural and interior design have been so logically absorbed into the American scene that by now they have acquired the air of being native. The gently pitched roof with the wide overhangs, the sliding shoji-like doors, the emphasis on naturalness of wood and stone, and the intimate little green gardens of shrubbery and rock—these are a few of the elements we tend to identify as West Coast and Hawaiian design. Yet all have their origins in the Japanese idiom. If they look inevitably American, it is because they represent the subtle, evolutionary process of assimilation, by which one society adapts, trims, and molds to its own peculiar needs the designs and customs of another society to which it has been exposed.

As an example of the valid design that can result from an honest amalgamation of American and Japanese elements, we show you the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel F. B. Morse in Pebble Beach, California, designed by Albert Ely Ives of Honolulu. Its owners, with typically (Please turn the page)

The great retaining wall, which supports the house on its sloping site, is an adaptation of the magnificent dry-built masonry walls that distinguish such fortress-castles as Nijo and Osaka. It is laid of local granite blocks, joined so that no mortar shows. Its subtle curve repeats the line of the roof.

Above and at left you see the broad living terrace, which is supported by the retaining wall and looks out on a view of Carmel Bay. A lanai, a roofed-over but open extension of the sitting room inside, reflects the influence of Hawaii. General conformation and details are Japanese in flavor, like the denticulated pattern of rafters supporting the overhangs, the lotus-like stone finials of the balustrade, the carved bases of the columns. But no Japanese house was ever like this.

The house is a complex of areas linked by passageways and courts, but the entry, in typically non-committal Oriental fashion, reveals none of the complexity that lies beyond it. Pictures at left and above show what first meets your eye as you arrive at the house. Much as a Japanese garden unfolds gradually, disclosing new and beautiful surprises as its pathways turn, the house reveals itself by degrees as you follow the passageway that leads around the courtyard to the open, airy living rooms and terrace on the far side of the building.

One corner of the inner court is a tiny pebble and water garden, a bit of intimately-viewed beauty that the Japanese consider indispensable, even in their least pretentious houses. Courtyard proper is paved and put to typically American use for outdoor living.

Californian awareness of the Orient, are knowledgeable admirers of Japanese art, and inveterate travelers who have experienced first-hand exposure to Japanese culture. The architect, a student of Oriental design, influenced by the remarkable society of assimilation that is Hawaii, has been translating the usable grammar of Japanese architecture into American homes in Hawaii for more than 20 years. So this house represents a seasoned, selective appreciation of Japanese design from two American points of view.

It is an expression of what might be called the cross-pollenization of cultures—a phenomenon that occurs as inevitably as night follows day when there is a geographical and sociological exposure of different peoples to each other.

It is by no means a Japanese house. (Please turn the page)

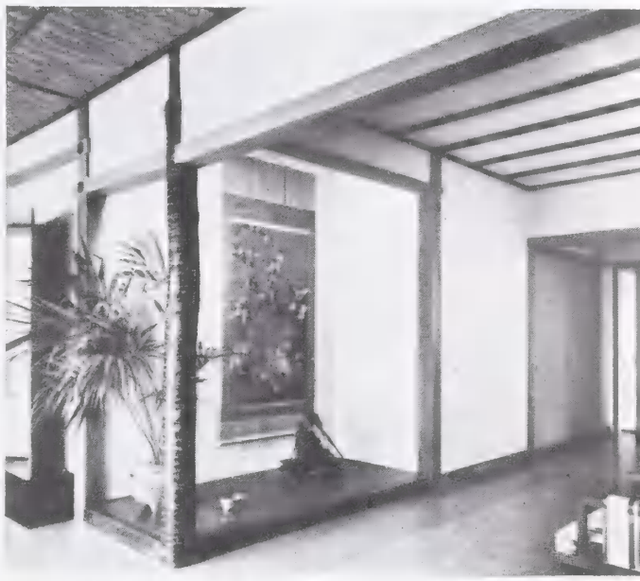
The living and sleeping areas of the house surround a paved courtyard partially planted with a Japanesque garden. The entrance passageway turns from the right and leads along the courtyard to the sitting and living rooms and to the open living terrace. The corridor paving is ceramic tile. The paneled ceiling of woven lauhala is a Hawaiian interpretation of the kind of ceilings you see in old Japanese houses—a good example of the way a design influence can cross a border.



This American family makes no pretense of living Japanese. In a literal imitation of a Japanese home, there would be no dining room, for the Japanese dine in the same room used for sitting and sleeping. In their dining room the owners enjoy the fine art of a Japanese screen in conjunction with 18th-century furniture. Balustrade of dining terrace is reminiscent of woodwork patterns you see on Japanese fences.

Below, the living room seen from the courtyard passage, when its sliding screens are open. Notice that these short screens set in a fixed wall are an Americanization of the truly Japanese floor-to-ceiling shoji. The built-up wall is needed in American rooms to create space against which furniture can be placed. On the far side of the room full-length sliding doors open onto the terrace seen in pictures on previous pages.

One of the few literal carry-overs from the Japanese house is the tokonoma in the Morse entrance hall. This is a display niche which provides the setting for a scroll and a flower arrangement, a sparse and beautiful composition to be enjoyed by the incoming guest. It is customary for the tokonoma post to be of natural wood, frequently with the bark still on it. This one was imported from Japan. Turning from this beauty, you are confronted by a passage wall lined with a 12-panel treasure of an antique screen, set up partially folded—an effective way to display a screen and ornament a wall at the same time.

The success of this house depends upon the normalcy and restraint with which Japanese objects and design details are used. They are not forced upon your consciousness but are simply assimilated with the familiar furnishings Americans are used to, like the furniture in this study. There is a lesson to be learned from this because now, when Japanese design is being "discovered" by so many Americans, we will be tempted to strain too hard to get a Japanese effect.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ASSIMILATION AND IMITATION continued

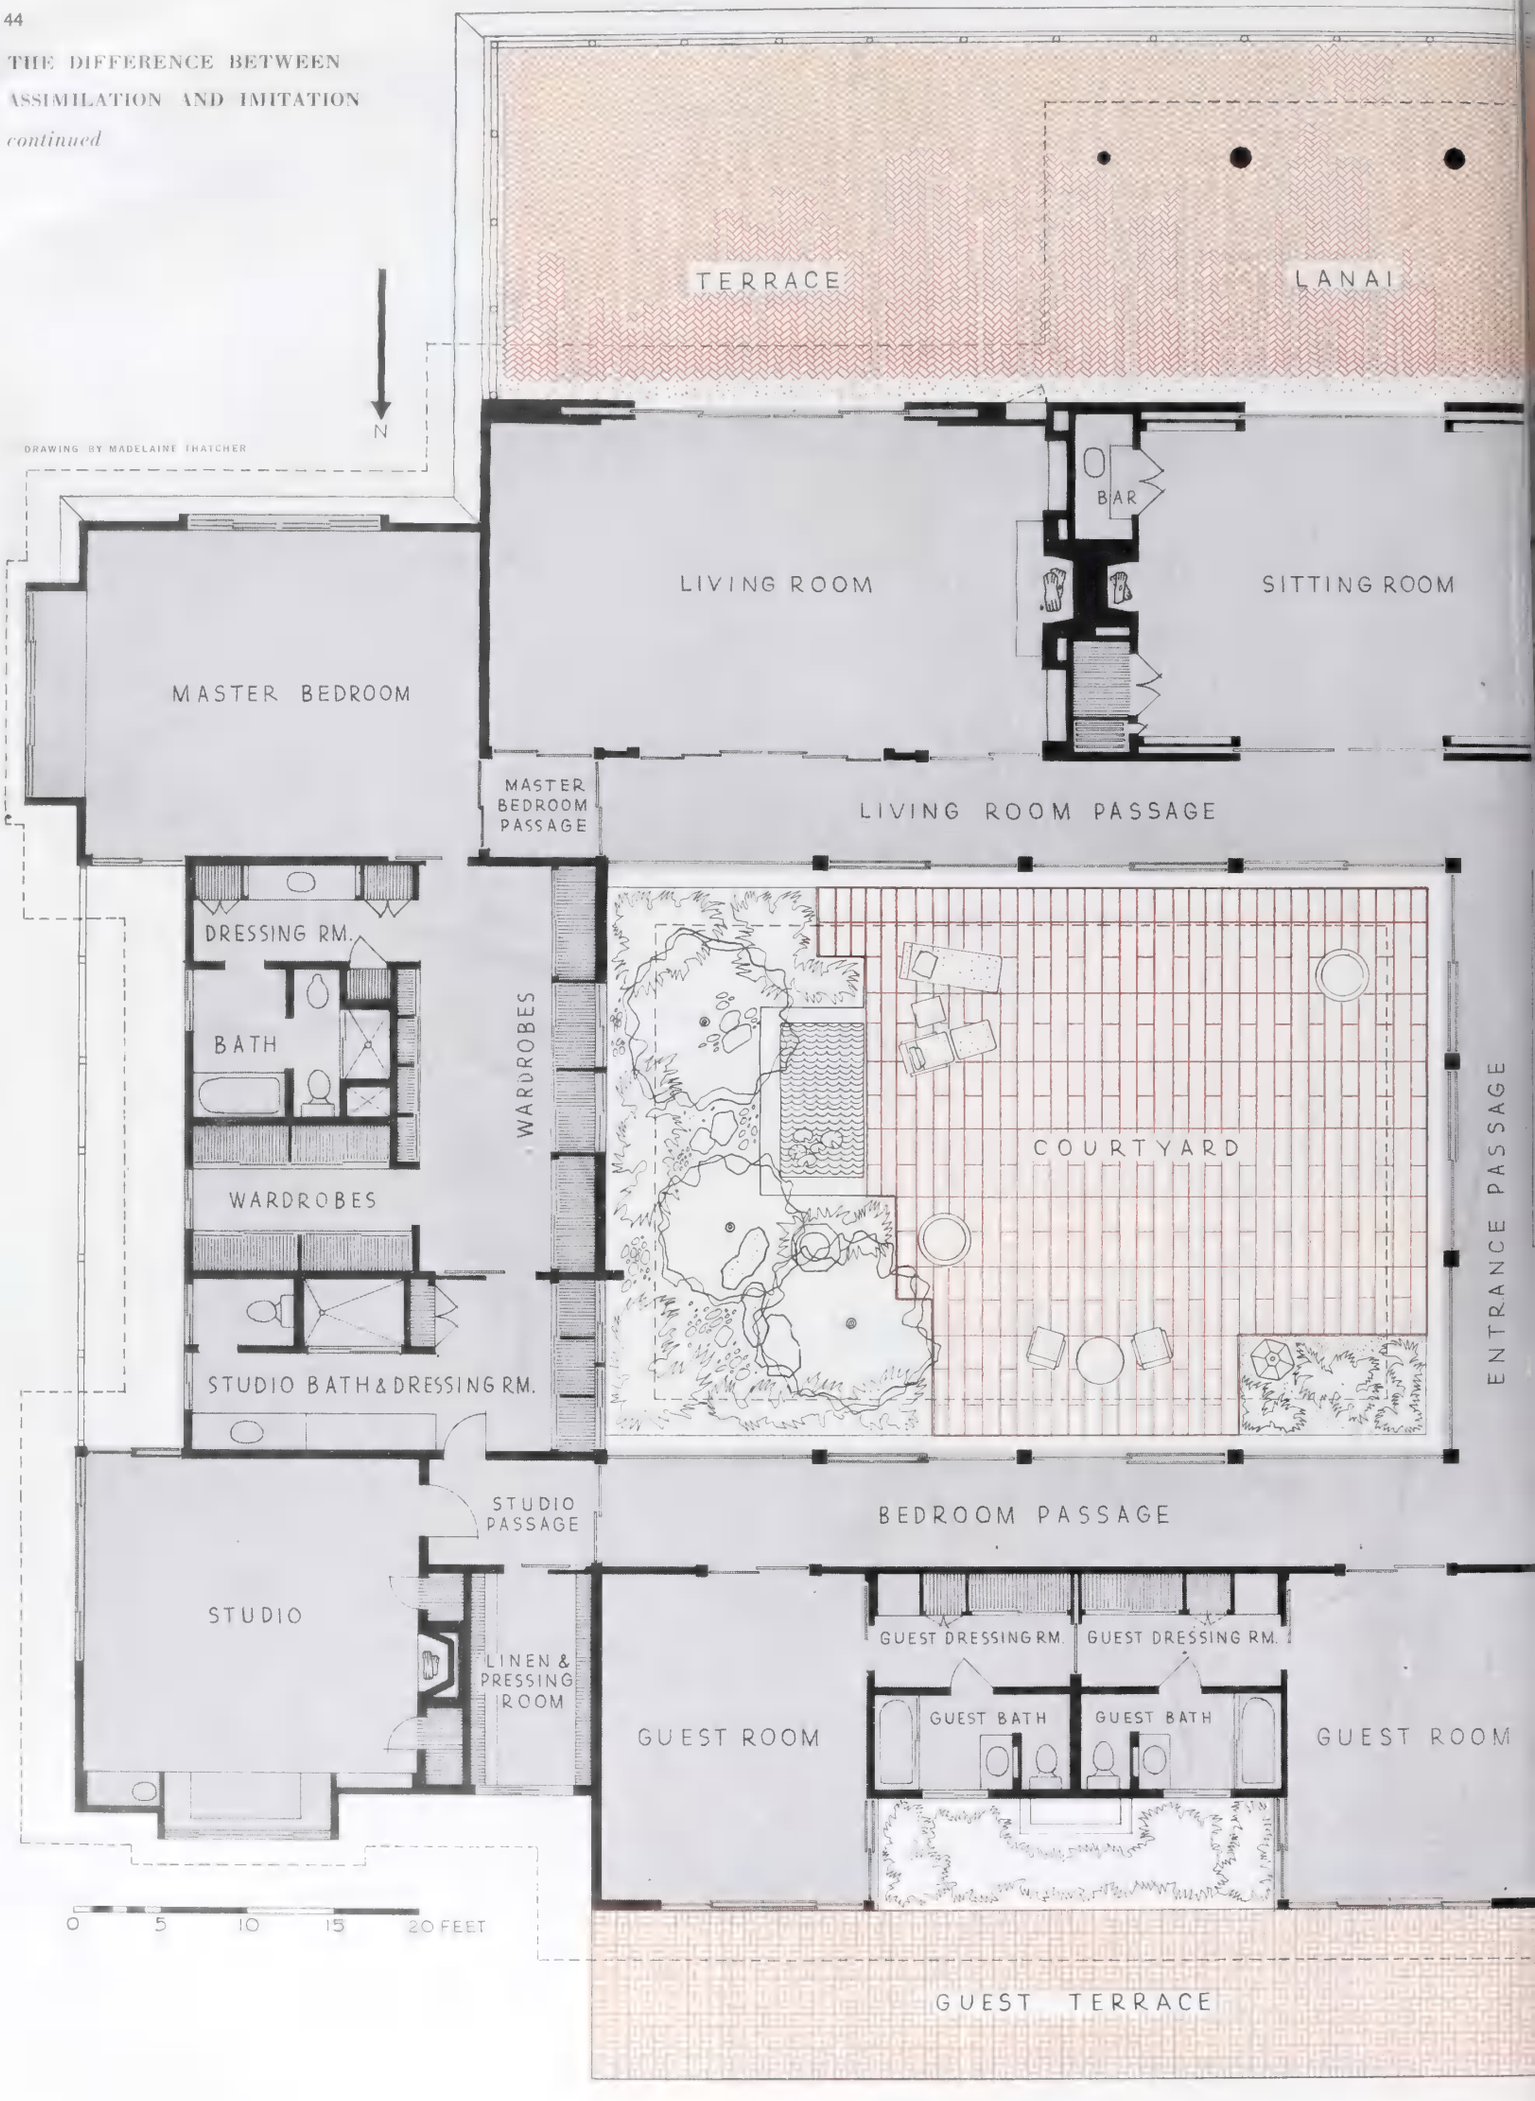
It is a house designed for the comfort and convenience of a modern American family who do not live on the floor, do not eat with chopsticks, who live a life such as few Japanese would find understandable.



The house is a recognition that certain principles of design, which happen to be Japanese, have something of value to add to the beauty and practical functioning of American shelter as this family wants to enjoy it. The shape of the house, its sloping, protective overhangs, its masonry retaining walls, and its sliding walls are there not just to create a Japanese effect but because they offer sound methods by which the owners could take the greatest advantage of this breezy, sloping site overlooking Carmel Bay. The retaining walls serve the practical purpose of providing a broad living terrace: the sliding glass walls open the living rooms to the terrace and the view.

There is much here that is truly, authentically Japanese in the owners' collection of screens, hardware, carved stone and bronzes, but you will notice that it is used with restraint, blended unaffectedly with furnishings of contemporary and 18th-century design, and actually lived with. In less sophisticated hands, these treasures might well be treated as if they were display pieces and the house a museum of Oriental art.

See the plan of this house on the next two pages.

The quality of the paved courtyard is Japanese; the function is American. An outdoor living area, it also offers a vista to the rooms that surround it, giving them light and creating cross ventilation, for all rooms are open on their far sides.

Studying the floor plan, you can see how the various areas of the Morse house relate to each other, separate but united, like the buildings of an Oriental compound. The house is what we call a modern American "great house," one of a genre of 20th-century houses which, in fineness of planning and perfectionist quality of construction, are the present-day equivalent of the mansions of former eras. It is heartening proof that high standards are still being maintained, and it is houses like this one that lead the way. In its assimilation of Japanese design, it is a straw in the wind, indicating how a valid foreign influence can enrich American living if it is logically, and without affectation, adapted to the owner's needs.

When a house fits itself unobtrusively into its site and seemingly allows nature to have its way, we feel the architect has achieved a little piece of perfection. This oneness with site, so well illustrated above, is visually aided by a play of two horizontal planes. The roof line is carried back and almost touches the slope of the earth, while the deck pulls the eye in the opposite direction, stretching past the core of the house and foundations farther into the lovely woods.

A Small House with a Strong Expression of Structure

By CAROLYN S. MURRAY

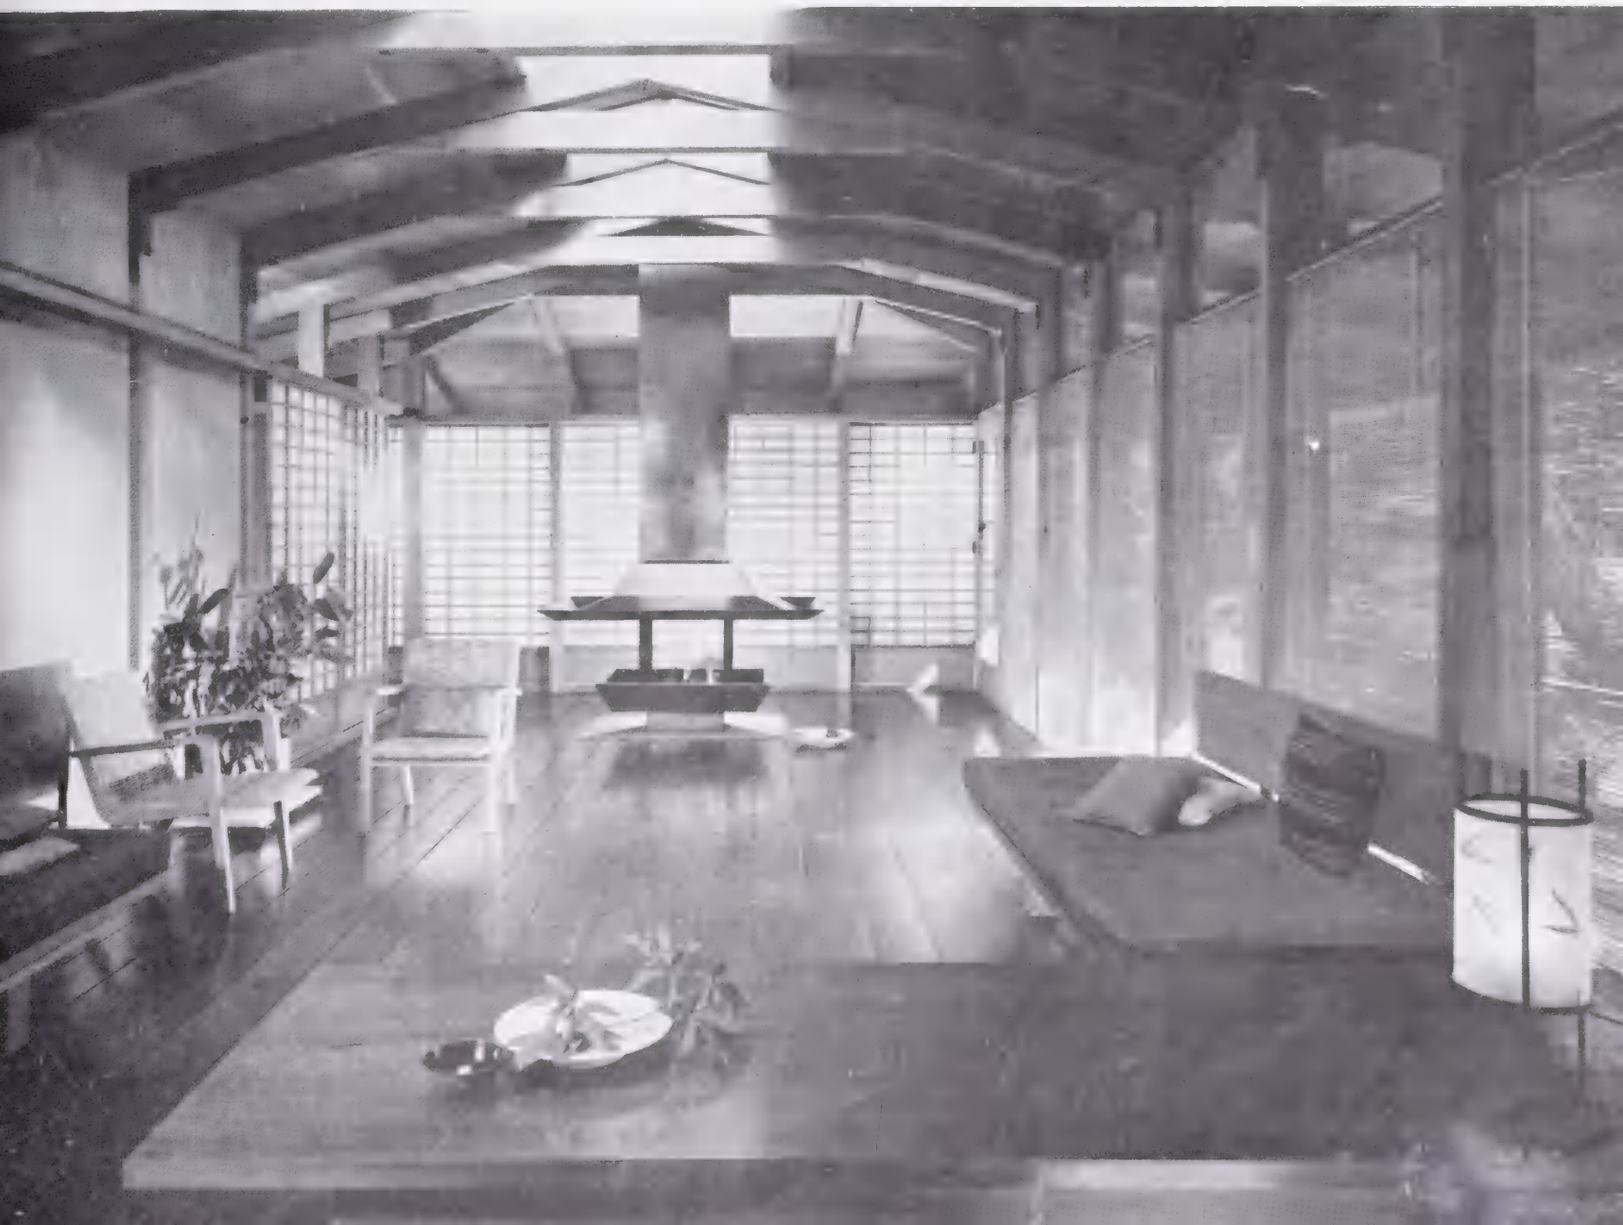
This 16′ x 36′ living room is the key to the success of this one-bedroom house. The owners, Mr. & Mrs. William McCullough, much like a Japanese family, can convert this space for dining, partying, or guest sleeping. Such easy flexibility is possible because most of their possessions can be kept out of sight in the two large storage areas at each end of the room. Shoji conceal kitchen and storage areas.

As trees reveal their beauty and strength, so this house exposes the nature of its structure for the eye's appreciation

● Although the one-bedroom house shown here is smaller than many a cabin in the woods, there is nothing crude or primitive in either the materials used or the system of construction. In fact the building technique is so simple and direct, it reveals itself, its materials, and its structural rhythm on the inside of the house, as well as on the exterior.

Owners Mr. & Mrs. William McCullough asked Architect Charles Warren Callister to give them the most beautiful, most economical one-bedroom house possible. They especially admired the qualities intrinsic to the Japaneses home—uncluttered spaces that work many ways: soft, filtered lighting: lots of storage: and a sense of integration with nature.



By integration they did not mean trying to bring nature indoors, but never creating a barrier between the house and its surroundings. They owned an exciting piece of hillside in an area wooded with live oak trees, and had no desire to tamper with this lovely natural environment. Also, they needed a house that could enclose them nicely when they were alone, as well as one that could expand hospitably for friends or overnight guests.

The resulting house answers all (Please turn to page 191)

There is a wonderful sense of sleeping out in the woods in this lower-level bedroom. Beautiful live oak trees silhouette themselves against the 3′ 6″ glass panels, while the frequently occurring supporting posts give a sense of stability equal to that of the tree trunks. Deck catches late day sun.

The air of uncluttered quiet and the quality of light in this house are similar to that found in the homes in Japan. There is no glare. Soft light enters from above through a full-length skylight at the roof ridge line. Reed shades filter the light coming in through the east windows. Here is a room from which to enjoy the sun and shadows flickering through trees outside, while watching the play of light on the exposed structural elements and gleaming materials of the interior.

How to be shibui with

The influence of Japan's aesthetics on American decorating, architecture, and gardening has been a recurring phenomenon ever since the 1880's and 1890's. Another wave of influence began almost ten years ago and is considered by some to have reached the proportions of a "Japanese boom." Is this true?

This gray and mauve tapestry by Lenore Tawney is well endowed with the kind of beauty known as shibui. Its design evolves from the way the weaver has combined different kinds of threads, plus her mastery of the technique of weaving.

American Things

● HOUSE BEAUTIFUL does not interpret the signs of wide interest in Japanese styling as a "boom." For this would mean that we are merely copying Japanese designs—without understanding them. If this were to be the case. it would mean that the Japanese look would be merely a passing fad—vogueish for ten or fifteen years only to pass into the limbo of oblivion. We feel the current interest is prompted rather by a search for meaning and richness, after the arid sterility of the Modern movement.

We feel there is such depth behind the look of things Japanese that it offers us the opportunity to master many new artistic principles and make them our own, in our American way.

One American designer who got the meaning, without ever producing a Japanese look, was Frank Lloyd Wright. Another was Louis Comfort Tiffany, the great designer in glass and metal, around the turn of the century. Both designed out of the nature of a material, exploiting its essential characteristics to make a new artistic result. Wright gave the name "organic" to this kind of designing.

A fair number of American artists and craftsmen have designed this way and their works could frequently be said to have achieved shibui—that Japanese word which stands for the highest type of lasting satisfying beauty. (See HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, August, 1960, for 20 pages of pictures and articles explaining shibui.) For without organic honesty coupled with artistic superlativeness the kind of beauty called shibui cannot be produced.

A stoneware jar by Peter Voulkos is a good example of the shibui objects being turned out by America's better handcraftsmen. He has blended clay, glaze, and design into a single entity. The decoration is expressive of the form, and its lack of positiveness adds to its charm. As with the tapestry, its quality derives from the artist's technique and his sensitive insight into what his materials can do.

These turned wooden bowls by John May can be said to be shibui because the grain of the wood has been made to count as the decoration. In short, they are organic in design, because the whole is no more than an intrinsic expression of the material and the method of making. (Bowl may be seen in profile at left.) Objects on these pages have a quiet, tranquil, understated beauty that comes from intrinsic quality and mastery.

New home furnishings with the Shibui Concept of Beauty

By ELIZABETH GORDON
Editor

● The level of beauty, which the Japanese rate as the highest and which they call shibui, is not altogether foreign to America and the Western world. For shibui is synonymous with the satisfying richness that people associate with old paneled rooms, fine old Oriental carpets, real and fine antique furniture. Shibui means quiet, mellowed, understated richness. It means intrinsic good quality which is both sober and rich at the same time. (For a definitive statement about shibui, see HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, August, 1960.)

There has not been too much of such severe exquisiteness around in our commercial scene. What there is would be found in good antique shops and in the work of skilled handcraftsmen who have passed beyond the experimental phase. Probably the fabric field could be said to be the single category in which you would be most likely to find shibui characteristics. (HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has said many times that the fabric industry is doing one of the best aesthetic jobs in America.)

Many Americans have achieved a shibui environment in their homes by assembling quiet, intrinsically-good elements. For there is an interesting aspect of the shibui concept: You can create a shibui syndrome out of non-shibui components. In other words, you can compose out of quietly good elements, that are not very interesting by themselves, a compilation that is very good and interesting. This is the well-known law that sometimes the whole can be greater than the sum of its parts.

Also, many men and women achieve the quality of shibui in their clothes by bringing accessories and apparel together with such calculated simplicity that the parts set up a quiet interplay, and each one enhances the others.

These instances, in which people have achieved a form of shibui, are usually the result of sound instinct rather than rational choice. For never before in the Western world has shibui been explained, and never have the specifications of it been spelled out as clearly as a road map shows you how to drive to some distant place.

Obviously HOUSE BEAUTIFUL thinks shibui is a condition of beauty worth trying to achieve. So we went to four manufacturers to ask them to create merchandise endowed with the required characteristics, which would be shibui by themselves and even more shibui when combined with each other.

We started with the elements that comprise the biggest areas in a room—floor, walls, window draperies, upholstered seating. If these big (Please turn the page)

Four American manufacturers have co-operated with House Beautiful in creating home furnishings that are endowed with the deep and subtle kind of beauty known as shibui. These furnishings have been styled to go together, color-wise and texturally. The Baker Furniture Company has created eleven pieces. Schumacher has created a large group of fabrics. Color-related rugs and carpets are made by Wunda Weve. Wall paints with shibui textures and colors are offered by Martin Senour

One of the characteristics of a thing that is shibui is that at first glance it looks plain and simple but on subsequent examinations it reveals more and still more. This lamp table has these depths. At a distance it looks plain but interesting. But up close, and in the right light, cross-hatched textured pattern is to be found on the fluted legs. The fact that the plain parts of the table are not flat planes lets it reflect interesting highlights.

This big coffee table was inspired by a shibui lacquer tray that had similar interesting curled legs. It combines lacquer with natural wood, with a carved beading around the outer edge. Such a combination of contrasting materials is characteristic of shibui objects. It is made with American dimensions, of course, so it would combine with our sofa and chair heights. Table is 21″ high and 50″ in diameter. The eleven shibui pieces of Baker Furniture may be ordered through decorators or the decorating departments of department stores.

A grouping of shibui pieces of furniture in an American house is quiet and undemonstrative. Everything is for use—not for making an impression. The fabrics of the curtaining and upholstery are not so patterned that they would call attention to themselves, yet are more interesting than plain.

areas are colored and textured in a shibui manner, then the main part of the environment will be shibui.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL co-ordinated the coloring in all categories so that rugs, fabrics, and paint formulae would not only have a shibui character by themselves, but also would compose with each other to make a shibui syndrome. Six families of color schemes were created, but many combinations can be made outside these color families.

In addition, a group of eleven pieces of furniture was designed by the Baker Furniture Company, using the principle of interesting understatement, which is essential to a shibui object. Most of the pieces are accent pieces, which could perform in a room as a piece of jewelry can enliven a simple costume.

All the furnishings created in the shibui concept have a timeless look and could not be labeled with any fashion or style tag. They are casual-appearing and without any contrived, attention-demanding design effects.

Small red lacquer cabinet has solidity, yet with an airiness that would keep it from bulking up in a room. The asymmetrical pattern of waving grasses on the door fronts is not at all dominant. (We had to labor to light it so this subtle decoration would show up well in our photograph.)

The three pieces of wood furniture, the carpet, the drapery, and the upholstery fabric are all examples of American-made shibui. Upholstery fabric on chair is the easiest to understand in this picture. (Other elements are so subtle they are hard to capture in a photograph.) The upholstery pattern has the same unfinished quality of a curling wave as it is about to break into foam.

A quiet richness is achieved in this cabinet whose front is upholstered in a shibui fabric. Its inner compartments are jewel-like with fine burl and linings of the same fabric. Putting more attention on the inside of a thing—whether it be a box, a coat, or a piece of furniture—is typically shibui, implies that the best should be private and that it would be immodest to parade one's private splendors before the world. Intrinsic goodness in workmanship and materials, which is part of the shibui concept, are observed here. Drawers need no hardware, for they are equipped with concealed touch latches, which cause them to spring out when pushed. Cabinet may be ordered with entire exterior made of wood.

Hassock uses fabric in a fresh way, upholstering structural parts with precious fabric. Tray top is interchangeable with cushion. Notice sympathy between this fabric and the lower part of the hanging kakemono. Notice too the textural character of the carpet, thanks to multi-toned yarns.

Close-up views of the fabrics, carpet, and paint samples reveal how textural and multi-toned they really are. Patterns are implied rather than positively stated. Paints are a new two-coat system, using a grainy aggregate. Sixteen shibui paint samples are offered for 35 cents. Details on page 194.

All these swatches have the common characteristic of not being a single positive color. You could not name their color, so indeterminate are they. They remind us of moss, the grain of rocks, the texture of bark. The white sheer would be shibui only if used to filter the light of outdoors, performing like a shoji. All fabrics on this page, except brown taffeta, are so colorful that they should be the small astringent accent note in a larger, quieter, less colorful background.

interestingness must be subtle or almost hidden, or else it will be too demanding of attention. Shibui must never be attention-demanding. It must have depths of interest that are so unobtrusive you will almost miss them. To put it in American slang, you should have to do a "double-take" to absorb all of shibui. If an object reveals itself all at once, then its design is too obvious.

So you can see that understanding about shibui is learning how to achieve lastingness in beauty. For its goal is to make a poetic thing out of the whole, whether it be a room, a costume, a person's manner, a garden, a meal.

The maximum in shibui would use all five senses. It even strives to include symbolism and double entendre. (Hence the Japanese love of gurgling water in their gardens, or the sound made by waterfalls.) We Americans probably cannot aspire to this all-out use of shibui until we have had longer exposure to the idea. We have done most of our thinking along lines that merely distinguish prettiness from ugliness. But the shibui concept goes way beyond prettiness and aims for profound and lasting beauty.

A shibui thing is always natural and normal looking. (This does not mean rustic.) It connotes rather a lack of artifice, a spontaneity. A shibui thing looks simple—until you study it. It must look effortless, for there is nothing superfluous, yet nothing wanting. Its look should convey tranquility and serenity. Nothing self-conscious could ever be shibui, whether an object, person, room, or garden.

One way the Japanese achieve this simplicity (or simple complexity) is via the unfinished statement, the uncompleted pattern, the fragmented motif. All hint at more than is shown. Think of all the great Japanese screens and scrolls you have seen in books or (Please turn to page 194)

The shibui idea applies to clothes. In fact, daily dressing is a good way to train oneself in this point of view. The American designer Mainbocher produces clothes that are the essence of shibui—quiet, well-bred, intrinsically fine quality, and very interesting if you look twice. This dress is charcoal gray and the inside of the attached stole is pearl gray—a very shibui color scheme, too. Dress has asymmetry and a fluid grace.

Even on a narrow city lot, a garden path is not an obvious straight line from street to house, but a meandering road of half-hidden turns that promise mysterious surprises. # Translating the Japanese Garden into American Terms

● Suggestion is the secret of Japanese gardens.

The Japanese have been solving the problems of too little space and not enough privacy for more than a thousand years. We who are just now having to learn to live on smaller and smaller house-lots can benefit enormously by taking a leaf from the Japanese garden book.

Adopting their principles and adapting their techniques to our different climates and terrains, we too can have gardens to make happy the humble, the modest, and the rich, gardens that are sanctuaries for withdrawal and refreshment. We can suggest the spaciousness, privacy, mystery, timelessness, interestingness, and the grandeur of nature in its primitive state that are qualities of Japanese gardens.

While we tend to mow lawns, edge garden plots, and remove rocks, aiming at an artificial, man-made-looking smoothness and order, the hand of man is even more involved in the seemingly wild state of the Japanese garden which is unmown, unedged, and carefully disordered. It is planned to recreate in miniature aspects of the natural landscape—mountains and lakes, valleys and streams, oceans and forests, interpreted in plantings, rocks, pebbles, sand, and water.

The Japanese garden is, in fact, one of the most understandable examples of shibui—the Japanese concept of beauty in its highest form. The shibui garden is man-made with the quiet look of something natural. Its colors are nature's own greens, grays, beiges, and browns, with rare flashes of the vivid in flowering shrubs. It has a timeless look, as if it had always existed. It seems never-ending. It cannot be seen at one glance. It leads the eye and foot around and through, always suggesting more. It is deeply interesting.

How is it done? Suggestion, mystery, relaxed asymmetry—and the patient hand of man. That is all. But it is so much.

A helpful key to the meaning of the Japanese garden is the fusing of house and environment into an entity. The gradual transition of home to garden is accomplished by links—eaves that hang into the garden, pine branches sweeping up to the house, walks repeating the lines of the building.

The "turning path" is one of the best examples of illusion that suggests mystery and more. Stepping stones so deeply set they seem to emerge from the earth will wind through the garden, allowing the wanderer (Please turn the page)

This thatched bamboo gate "frames" a path so that it acquires visual depth and apparent distance. to stroll, then pause to enjoy a view. Then the path will disappear round a rock or bush suggesting that there is more if one will look.

The path itself may be stones, or many-shaped slabs, or pebbles, or mosaics of tiles, or combinations of these materials—to list a few of the possibilities. It may step adventurously through pools, climb and descend. It always invites the viewer to wander on to see what will happen next. Its winding variety slows the step, making a short distance more intriguing and, therefore, longer.

The Japanese gardener suggests space, using many enchanting tricks played with perspective. Paths will narrow as they go away to imply greater distance. Large, close-to-the-spectator trees or see-through (Please turn to page 195)

In crowded, nature-conscious Japan, where house lots are generally small and narrow, you rarely find an obvious straight entry path from street to house. You are more likely to enter by a path (of stepping stones or asymmetrically patterned paving) which turns or bends like a woodland trail, withholding the house from immediate view and giving a sense of greater distance. Sketches show five different entries all based on the fact that a greater sense of space results when a path is laid indirectly, even on a rectangular plot.

A large, light-color object placed in the foreground makes the background appear to dwindle off into distance, so you can understand why this great stone was placed at the foot of this little stairway that seems to disappear mysteriously.

Ascending gradually, almost like a flight of stairs, the path seems to lead up into mystery. This effect is achieved by a contrived composition of rocks and foliage, deliberately concealing what lies beyond the turn—it might be a dead end.

How to create the illusion of more space by the optical device called sawari

Making the garden seem bigger than its true size is a goal for all of us. In Japan, where most gardens are tiny, they have become adept at tricks of illusion. One of the most useful is called sawari: looking through close-up verticals or horizontals (or both) to something beyond, which makes the distance seem more distant. What you look through may be tree trunks, bamboo stalks, or fence. Not seeing one or both ends of a thing also belies the scale.

PHOTOGRAPH BY DAVID ENGEL

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER

This garden achieves the effect of greater depth than it possesses, thanks to close-up placing of tree trunks which distract attention and belie the true perspective. Clumps of sheared azaleas suggest hillocks, intensifying the illusion of distance.

The eye is caught—before it can look for a horizon—by the trees and the carved stone column placed so close to the bamboo veranda that the house seems to be in the middle of a forest. Actually, the wall of next house is only 20 feet away.

Enlarge the apparent size of a garden with borrowed landscape, if there is any. Then you can enjoy more than you own

The illusion of spaciousness can also be achieved by not defining where your garden ends. If there is something pleasant beyond your property line, make this scene "read" together with your own. This is easiest when the land either rises or falls around you. In flat terrain it is harder. Then the most you can borrow is your neighbor's lawn or treetops, always assuming there is no barrier or demarcation to announce the property line. If your neighbor has erected a line marker, mask it with planting.

Where does a garden like this end? The open gate and winding path imply that you are invited to go on down and over to the next hill. The entire view "belongs" to the garden in the foreground, which is really only about ten feet deep.

The Magnificent Plant Specimen

● The Japanese ability to turn a tree or shrub into what amounts to an artistic triumph is perhaps their most misunderstood garden technique. To the true Japanese gardener there is never any torturing of a growing plant. It is simply that "by discovering the hidden artistic potentialities in a plant, he can emphasize these qualities, eliminate distracting elements, and thus reveal its true nature to the world," as David Engel puts it so well in his book, Japanese Gardens for Today. This is done by judicious pruning and by supporting branches in such a way that they may continue to grow as they wish. All this takes many years, and as the specimen assumes (Please turn to page 197)

One of the most famous sights in Japan, the allée in the gardens of the Katsura Imperial Palace, is focused on a magnificent tree silhouetted against one of the many ponds in the gardens. Note the turn in the trunk of the tree near the ground and consider how many years ago and with what artistry the decision was made to prune the tree in just this direction.

PHOTOGRAPH BY JEANNETTE GROSSMAN

Above: Years of careful pruning have developed this breath-taking tree, magnificently presented in a space cleared of all minor diversions. As the tree gradually reached this full growth, the surrounding scenery was pushed back to keep it in scale. The long horizontals would not have been possible without the man-made supports, yet, once supported, the limbs grew that far naturally. Far left: A Japanese-pruned tree in a California garden. See how the under sides of the branches have been cleaned to reveal the true lines of their structure.

The younger tree, at right, though raised on a mounded-up hillock to show it off, still has supporting actors on its stage, the clipped azaleas at the side. In years to come, as the tree in the center develops an even more commanding shape, these smaller plants may be removed.

Pencil-thin water reeds are wired together, then laced onto a bamboo frame to make this divider in the tiny space between two houses in Japan. Bamboo planted against it reinforces the growing-ness feeling of fence material.

Naturalistic Materials for Fences

● The long experience of the Japanese in creating privacy and serenity even in the tiniest gardens can be invaluable for us as our desire for seclusion increases. They have a unique ability to fence-in without the feeling of obstruction or intrusion. The key to their success is the use of natural materials in their natural state. These materials do not clash with rocks and plants and sand and water. Their unevenness of color and pattern make them appropriate and sympathetic to these other natural elements. All parts are of nature. Man has only arranged the parts.

Reed, rush, bamboo, bark, twigs—these are the raw materials the Japanese start with. They may be woven, split, peeled, or polished, but the essential quality of growing-ness will not be disturbed, and their natural color will never be altered. Within these limitations the Japanese find countless ways to achieve variety in fashioning fences. The patterns, colors, and textures are then allowed to count for something in the garden scheme.

Fortunately for us, many of the same fencing materials used by the Japanese are available here. Fortunately, too, they are among the most inexpensive materials suitable for full privacy fencing (details and sources on page 187).

These fences are particularly valuable in solving privacy problems in America. For even with a prominent frame (see example at right), they are as handsome on one side as the other.

No finish is needed to protect these materials. They weather gracefully, some more quickly than others. But they always retain the look of "belonging" in the garden, where they might easily have grown in the first place.

FIVE PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Two rows of reed fencing baffle the entrance to an American garden, eliminating the need for any gate. To give it rigidity here, a framework of 4 x 4's was erected, with 2 x 4 and 2 x 3 stretchers. Fencing material is tacked to the framework as it unrolls. Top cap protects ends of reeds from moisture. View of both sides (above and right) shows there is no "bad" side.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY RONDAL PARTRIDGE

The shaggy texture of bark gives a pleasantly rustic look to fences in an informal setting. As seen in Japan (far left), the bark is tacked to bamboo strips, then mounted on a frame of poles, which are simply young trees stripped of their own bark. Close-up (left) shows how interesting the texture of bark can be. Though it will weather away to some extent, the bark will always retain this shaggy quality.

Along a road in California, the same reed fencing used in Japan creates a private garden. Material is so light and flexible that it can easily be bent around a curve like this. It usually comes six or eight feet high in a variety of lengths.

This rock was treated as sculpture by Frank Lloyd Wright, who built an architectural mounting to "frame" it as one would a work of art of any kind.

Imagine the pleasure of entering a "Bar and Grill" from stepping stones that lead down through a lightly trickling man-made stream. And this on a busy Tokyo street!

The appreciation of rocks

● A new world of interest can be discovered in the collection and arrangement of rocks, an art the Japanese have raised to a high level. In Japan, which even possesses a Rock Appreciation Society, an especially beautiful stone may be brought hundreds of miles and cost hundreds of dollars. Each rock is chosen for its character and individuality. Arranged sculpturally in asymmetrical groups, rocks are the strong points in a garden, transitional elements between water and land, plant and earth, garden and house, and symbols of jagged mountains or river beds. They always provide a sense of age and permanence.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY KIICHI ASANO

Rounded stones in groups of 3, 5, and 7 ("lucky" numbers) complement the vertical lines of tree trunks. The result is a serene composition to contemplate from the house veranda.

A Japanese "Dry Garden." Rocks, moss, and gravelly sand have been combined in a striking if contrived way. The sand, raked into a flowing pattern, suggests a mountain stream.

A stone water basin at the entrance of a New York garden is a small oasis of gently dripping water. The bamboo spout is connected to an underground pipe controlled from the house.

Rocks and plants hide the man-made source of this waterfall. Splashing sounds add to the effect of a forest glade, though the garden wall is only a few feet away from this scene.

—and water

Add the sights and sounds of waterfalls, sparkling lakes, rivers and quiet pools

● We, too, can have water effects in our gardens. Pipes connected to the house water supply system can help, if necessary. Even a thin trickle of water down the face of a rock adds pleasant sounds and high lights to the garden. To make a fast-running stream, an 11th-century Japanese gardener advises one to set many rocks in the waterway. A stone set into a stream bed divides the flow. Or, half-hide a still pool with plants to catch reflections of overhanging branches, clouds, and sky. Fill a stone basin with water, place it near a veranda uniting garden and house, and mask its base with ferns and low plants. If no water is available, suggest a river bed by raking wave patterns into sand or gravel.

In true Japanese tradition, this five-story stone pagoda was placed in an American garden not as an ornament to be admired solely of itself, but to heighten the magnitude of view.

The quiet contrast of a stone object placed against stone provokes thoughtful observation, hence is more shibui than the more obvious contrast of stone against green foliage.

The man-made accent in the garden

● Such artifacts as stone lanterns, hand-washing basins, pagodas, and fences are man-made, but in the Japanese garden they exist for the purpose of heightening the naturalistic effect by their very contrast, much as the sight of a lonely man on a mountainside creates in the beholder a greater sense of the wilderness. Symbolically, they are reminders of man's oneness with nature, so they never stand quite alone as extraneous ornament, but are blended into the scene, merged with stone or veiled by shrubbery so that they become an integral part of the naturalistic scheme.

Shibui* garden objects have the weathered look of age, like these lichen-covered stone water basins. Man-made, they blend so normally with nature as to seem natural themselves.

The lantern and its cloaking shrubbery are both used here as bold foreground devices to make the house seem farther away. Large-leafed foliage is planted at front, fine-leafed at back.

Dragon a party of four can kill two and a half hours and two bottles of Bordeaux '53 during a nine-course Viennese lunch, totting up to $20 plus tip. At "Le Pot" you can fill up on atmosphere and a good French meal for $3.50.

Browsing in an airport

If you have a long wait between flights, most airports are the living end to wait in. Yet a few are so absorbing they threaten to make you miss the connection, especially if their paper-book stall is good. The San Francisco Municipal Airport is one of these, besides being imaginatively equipped with all sorts of restaurants and lunchrooms, and shops. But for real solid browsing in the book department, give us Willow Run in Detroit. We like Newark because we're entranced by the fireworks with which The Newarker restaurant serves its coconut ball ice cream desserts—studded with sparklers.

Shannon is not a pretty airport, but you could lose a day without knowing it, between its free-port shopping, the wonderful unpretentious food in its restaurants (whole grain bread, oatmeal, bacon and eggs, tea), and the friendly, brogue-sweetened conversation of the people who work there.

Copenhagen, also a free port, is one of the best planned airports in the world, so if you're interested in logic, you can while the time away noting how sensibly and conveniently all the facilities a traveler needs are lined up in the order he needs them—the bank, the post office, the baggage claim—so you don't have to institute a search for such necessities.

In Rome you couldn't put a spare hour or two to more fruitful purpose than to take a trolley ride around town on one of the circolari, the two belt-line trams that circle the city, passing more famous sights than we could list—except to say that things like the Coliseum, the Forum, and even the Church of St. John Lateran turn out to be casual tram stops along the way. The car marked Circolare Nera (black) makes a loop inside the city; the Circolare Rossa (red) circles the perimeter. You can make the full circuit or get off the tram wherever you please. Cost of this travel bargain is 35 lira or 6¢.

It's presumptuous to tell anyone how to kill time in Florence, but a favorite haunt of ours is the Palazzo Medici (or Ricardi) where you can see Benozzo Gozzoli's room-covering mural, painted in 1450, depicting the coming of the wise men to Bethlehem, but actually peopled with portraits of all the personages of the painter's own era.

Museums are naturals for short-span time-passing provided you don't try to see everything in them. The great and famous museums are obvious, but sometimes the lesser-publicized ones are intriguing.

Renaissance in Boston

A few hours between trains or planes in Boston gives you a chance to see one of the world's notable collections of Italian Renaissance art and furnishings at The Isabel Stewart Gardner Museum, 280 Fenway. Open Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, 10:00 A. M. to 4:00 P. M.; Sundays 2:00 to 5:00 P. M.

If you're grounded for a while at Chicago's Midway Airport, a short taxi ride takes you to the Rosenwald Museum of Science and Industry on the Lake front at 55th Street. They've got a coal mine going there.

One of our favorite Chicago pastimes is a visit to the American Indian section of the Field Museum of Natural History in Grant Park. Admission, 25¢. Free on Thursday, Saturday, Sunday. Open till 8:00 P. M. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday.

Two high points from which to view the town and lake front are The Top of the Rock, restaurant and cocktail lounge on the roof of the Prudential Building, and the Tip Top Tap in the Allerton Hotel.

Count yourself lucky if you're stranded in Toronto or Toledo. Toronto's Museum of Art has a major and fascinatingly presented collection of Chinese and Japanese art and antiquities. The Toledo Museum, generally unknown to most Americans, has the Edward Drummond Libbey collection of art, considered by many the third ranking collection in the U. S. A., and a great show of glassware, appropriately enough, since the Libbey Glass Company has made the city one of the country's great glassmaking centers.

TIME ON YOUR HANDS

In New Orleans, in an hour's time you can see one of the most exciting buildings in the country—International House, a sort of exhibition hall of Latin-American merchandise and club house, where Latin-American and U. S. business interests meet on a common ground.

And if you feel you've "had" all the so-called "must" New Orleans restaurants that most tourists head for, and especially if you have hit the point in your travels where you long to be in a home instead of a public institution, lunch or dinner at Corinne Dunbar's, 1716 St. Charles Ave., for you. You might as well be dining in a private house where Southern hospitality and Southern cooking really live up to their reputation. You must make a reservation in advance.

Philadelphia, happy hunting ground for sightseers of American history, also has a choice set of Colonial great houses, handsomely furnished and open to the public in Fairmount Park, as well as the Japanese house that delighted so many visitors when it was originally set up in the garden of the Museum of Modern Art in New York—rather a feast for anyone between trains in the Quaker City.

Time-money-and-labor-saver

It's no news that American travelers to foreign countries can bring back a gallon of liquor, which usually costs much less abroad than it would at home. But it can also happen if you're traveling by air, that this bargain, weighing about 15 pounds, can tip the scales nastily and put you into the excess-weight bracket, so your savings are canceled. And no matter how you travel, you have the headache of toting and taking care of an extra piece of baggage.

A firm called La Belle Creole Internationale, Port-au-Prince, Haiti (U. S. offices at 366 Broadway, New York City), has worked out a plan whereby you can buy your quota at free port prices no matter where you go outside the U.S. You buy it sight unseen, without even putting a finger to it, because you order it by mail and the shipment is made directly to your home (if you live in any of the 12 states to which such deliveries can currently be made). The procedure is this: Before you go abroad you get the price list and order blank from your travel agent or from the company's U. S. representative. When you are outside the country, you mail the order to La Belle Creole. Upon your return, you list your purchase on your customs declaration as "purchase to follow." You mail your record of customs declaration to the company's express agent in Antwerp, and in from four to six weeks your order is delivered. For price lists and more detailed information, write the company direct.

Tax-free smoking

This reminds us that travelers flying out of the country from New York International Airport can buy two cartons of cigarettes at tax-free prices at the World Tobacco Company shop on the second floor of the Arrivals Building. The cigarettes are delivered to you when you are aboard the plane. You must order them no later than a half hour before departure time.

À la carte in the air

Speaking of ordering in advance, Swissair now offers a flattering à-la-carte menu service to its first-class and de luxe passengers. When you get your ticket, you also get a complete roster of the gourmet dishes their Catering Department is willing to prepare for your delectation on the flight. Check off your choices on a card and mail it to Swissair 48 hours before flight time, and whatever you've ordered will show up on your tray when mealtime rolls around.

Off-beat and off-season

Evidence is ample that more and more people are looking for new, or at least untrodden, travel worlds to conquer. One of the most amusing, sensible, and good-looking brochures on off-beat places that are especially rewarding in fall and winter is the inimitable Ludwig Bemelman's How to Have Europe to Yourself, written and colorfully illustrated by the old master himself for the European Travel Commission. You can get a copy if you send 25¢, addressing the ETC at Box 2866, Dept. A, New York 17, N.Y.

HOW AMERICANS ARE USING JAPANESE IDEAS

thought in the Western world scorn. The Japanese house seems particularly designed for the appreciation of this association. Although their houses are raised above the ground as a solution to the problems of dampness and humidity, it could also be assumed that they are elevated simply for a better outlook over their gardens.

Their gardens are planned to be seen from this elevated viewpoint as well as from ground level. And their houses, in addition to opening up to the garden, always have a sheltered veranda, a transitional element between the room and the garden, on which one may sit and view the garden.

This house has verandas, somewhat similar in idea and construction, in its many wood-floored platforms: one outside of the bedroom; one overlooking the garden court wing; one off the dining room, around which the house is built; and one outside of the living room with a longer view of the country.

Art and architecture now seem preoccupied with a search for newness for the sake of mere novelty. They have wandered away from their traditional role, the concern for the transformation and elevation of common utility. At this time, perhaps, the most important idea in Japanese architecture which we might use is the one represented by the many ideas in this house: the ability of the craftsman and the designer to infuse the most practical solutions with dignity and with spirit.

CONSTRUCTION DETAILS

This is a wood-framed house built over crawl space. It rests on reinforced concrete foundations and piers. Major exterior walls are finished with ochre-stained cement stucco, trimmed with stained redwood. One outside wall of the master bedroom has lapped 1 x 12 redwood siding with vertical batten strips. The garage doors and the front wall of the garage are covered with random thickness redwood bean poles. The red cedar shingle roof has decorative redwood ridges. Exposed 4 x 4 rafters in the eaves are painted white on the ends.

Most interior walls are covered with grass cloth or are unfinished white-coat plaster with rice straw mixed in and exposed. The pool dressing-room has redwood for interior walls, ceiling, and trim. Other ceilings are either painted plaster or ¼" stained ash plywood resting on redwood 3 x 3's (except in entry and baths where reed and woven wood are used).

Stained and waxed oak floors are used in the living room, entrance hall, dining room, maid's room, and master bedroom wing. Vinyl floor tiles are used in the kitchen and breakfast room. The lowered floor around the fire pit in the living room lanai is black-stained, precast concrete tile. Paving in entrance walk is pebble concrete and field stones with redwood dividers. Entry has polished black Japanese pebbles set in concrete.

Sliding glass doors, shoji, fixed sash, sliding windows, and screens are custom-built from vertical-grain Douglas fir. Stained, painted, or papered flush doors separate bedrooms, bathrooms, and service areas from the rest of the house. Baseboards throughout the house are oak, and all other interior trim is stained, vertical-grain Douglas fir. Custom-built cabinets are ash plywood and vertical-grain Douglas fir.

Except for decorative lamps and lantern fixtures, all lighting consists of pinhole or square recessed fixtures.

Water supply lines are copper throughout the house, and soil and vent pipes are cast iron or galvanized steel as required. Gutters and downspouts are custom-made from galvanized sheet iron.

Miniature wood plane designed for model-maker hobbyists is equally worth-while for carpentry involving hard-to-reach areas or small projects. GM-O plane, only 3½ inches long and ¼ pound in weight, can be securely palmed for precise, operating control. A 1-inch cutter made of alloy tool-steel is held by plate fitted with set screw for cutter adjustment. Sturdily built. $1. Great Neck Saw Manufacturers, Mineola, L.I., N.Y.

This rust-stain remover for textiles differs from others. Usual ones are basically hydrofluoric acid which could harm eyes or hands; Fast's formula doesn't contain this acid. Most formulations for fabrics are specialized for that use, but Fast product effectively treats plumbing fixtures, painted blinds, metals, chrome, cement. Safe for colored fabric; $1. Fast Chemicals, 965 Nepperhan Ave., Yonkers, N.Y.

A remedy for stopped-up sink drains is a worth-while thing to have on hand for "first-aid." One, easy to use and effective in service, is Carter Drain Cleaner. ### CONSTRUCTION DETAILS

Basically this is a wood-framed house. Douglas fir is used where the framing is concealed by other materials. Clear California redwood heartwood is used where the framing is exposed as rafters in the soffits and as posts in the courtyard, the entrance lanai, and the sitting room lanai. All major living, service, and entertaining areas have wood-framed floors over crawl space.

The foundation is concrete block and poured concrete. Mechanical equipment and bulk storage is located in a basement under the kitchen and servants' quarters. Reinforced concrete slabs, resting on crushed rock and compacted fill, are used as the paving base in: the courtyard and its surrounding passages, the entrance hall and entrance lanai, the garage, the service lanai, the sitting room lanai, and all terraces. Concrete block was used for basic chimney construction and for walls between the garage and laundry, and the lower half of the garage walls.

The roof is covered with red cedar shakes laid 8″ to the weather on spaced 1 x 3 nailing strips. All flashings, gutters, downspouts, and chimney caps are 16-ounce copper, chemically treated to create an antique green patina. Some exterior walls are covered with stained, horizontal, 1 x 12 clear redwood heartwood siding with a superimposed redwood grid blind-nailed with non-staining aluminum nails.

OTHER exterior walls are covered with a smooth three-coat cement plaster or with three-coat plaster in which decorative horizontal grooves have been cut. The courtyard wall toward the master dressing rooms and the lower half of the entrance lanai wall are covered with square slate, set diagonally, with a raised bead of white cement covering each joint. Exterior masonry walls and retaining walls are made of local granite laid with closely fitted joints so that no mortar shows.

Unless otherwise noted, all lumber in custom-built windows and doors is clear, edge-grain, kiln-dried fir, custom-milled to the architect's specifications. Doors in sitting room and living room are metal and wood shoji, custom-made for the owner. Flush doors in servants' sitting room, maids' rooms and maids' baths, laundry, garage passage, and garage are fir. Flush doors in dinette, powder room, men's room, master bedroom, guest bedrooms, guest dressing rooms, guest bathrooms, and linen and pressing room next to the studio, are surfaced with white Philippine mahogany. Doors in dining room are oak; in studio bath and dressing room, white oak; in studio, pine; in master bedroom, master dressing room and baths, primavera. Usually in any one room, the wood used for doors is also used for trim, base, cornice, casework.

Windows in garage, powder room, ladies' room, guest bathrooms, linen and pressing room, studio dressing room and bath, master dressing room and bath, and pantry are glazed with double-strength sand-blasted glass. So also are the sliding glass doors leading to the terraces from both guest rooms and the two fixed glass panels on either side of the entrance lanai.

Panels of fiberglass are used in the windows between the living room and the living room passageway. It is also used in the sliding shoji doors between the living room and terrace, between the sitting room and terrace, and between the sitting room and the living room passage. All other windows and doors are glazed with ¼″ polished plate glass or crystal sheet glass.

FLOORS in living room are koa wood, specially imported by owner from Hawaii. (Walls, trim, cornice, and cabinetwork are of the same wood.) Studio floor is imported glass mosaic tile.

Unless otherwise noted, interior walls are painted or papered plaster. Walls in both guest dressing rooms are plaster on white Philippine mahogany. Sitting room paneling is white pine, and studio is knotty pine.

Unless otherwise noted, ceilings are painted plaster. Entrance lanai and service lanai have 1″ x 12″ tongue-and-groove redwood: entrance hall has plaster and cherrywood poles; studio has fir beams and plaster: master dressing room and bath has primavera: guest room No. 1 has gomaha and bamboo; guest room No. 2 has redwood planks. Woven lattice ceilings in entrance passage, living room passage, and bedroom passage are ¼" curly maple plywood and ajiro. Ceilings in pantry, dinette, kitchen, and servants' sitting room are fiberboard with a 2′ x 2′ or 4′ x 4′ v-grooved pattern.

RAILING around terrace and base of slate wall in courtyard and around entrance lanai are cast stone: 1 part cement, 1 part coarse sand, and 2 parts Travertine stone granules. Tokonoma pole in entrance hall, carved stone bases for posts, and the metal bases for the wood columns were imported by the owner.

The pantry sink and counter top and the kitchen sink and counter top, with six built-in gas burners, are both custom-made of stainless steel.

Soil lines and plumbing stacks over 2" diameter, and drain lines, vents, and fittings over 3" diameter are cast iron. If smaller pipes are used for the same purposes, they are galvanized wrought iron. All interior water supply lines are Type L hard-drawn copper tubing. Exterior supply lines are Type K soft copper tubing. Bronze gate valves are used throughout, and air chamber extensions run up 12" above all fixture outlets to prevent water hammer. Any exposed pipes in bathroom or kitchen are chromium plated brass.

All electrical wiring and telephone wiring concealed in floors, walls, or ceilings is in rigid conduit. Intercom wiring is in attic in knob and tube.

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER

Bamboo fence, set off the ground on a 4-x-4 base, is made of poles about 2″ in diameter individually tacked in place. This would be a relatively expensive fence.

Fencing available here

Many of the materials used by the Japanese are available here in the United States. The fencing normally comes in 6-foot or 8-foot heights, in rolls from 10 feet to 25 feet long.

The two most common types are reed fencing (seen in many of our photographs) and ½″ bamboo slat fencing. They are also the most inexpensive. The reeds or bamboo slats are wired together roughly every four inches with stainless-steel wire. Being very light in weight, they require a sturdy frame to support them (a variety of frames can be seen in the photographs). When so framed, these materials will stand up very well (except, perhaps, under the direct impact of a baseball) and should have a life of 4 to 8 years depending on their exposure and the amount of wear they receive. The fencing costs from 60¢ to 80¢ a running foot (for the 6-foot height).

A more expensive version of the reed fencing is the "polished" type, which costs about $1.20 for a similar running foot. This has a cleaner, brighter look than the unpolished and will stand up longer because of its finish.

Bamboo pole fences

Whole round bamboo fencing is also available. Bamboo is intrinsically stronger and heavier than reed and the resulting fence is considerably sturdier. The fencing also needs support but, depending on the diameter of the bamboo, may need only posts or poles instead of a complete framework. The pencil-size bamboo fencing comes in the 6-foot height and costs about $2.20 a running foot. One-inch bamboo fencing (like that in the photograph below right) is made to order and costs roughly $4.20 for a running foot of 6-foot fencing. Individual bamboo poles varying from 1 to 2 inches in diameter and 9 to 10 feet in length may also be bought for about $1 each.

Bark for fencing

Sugi bark, a rough-textured reddish-brown bark, comes in strips 12 or 14 inches wide and about 6 feet long, packed in bundles that cost about $45. This works out to about $1.25 a running foot.

Sources of supply

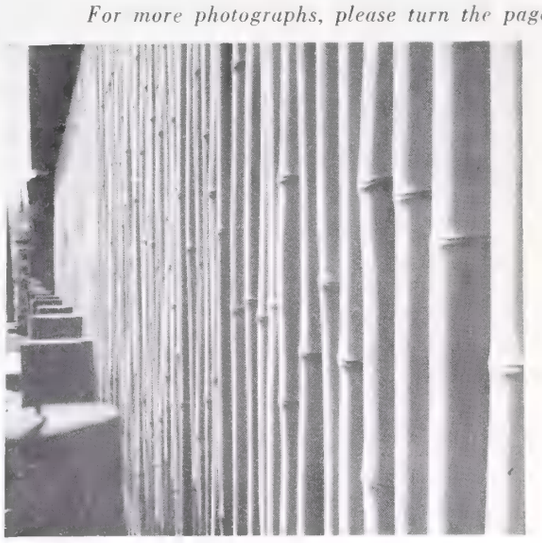
The reed and bamboo-slat fencing is now widely available at large garden supply centers located near metropolitan areas. It will be much more convenient if you can locate it at such a place since this will eliminate questions of shipping cost, condition of material, etc. You will actually be able to examine the material itself and decide its usefulness for yourself. Often, a garden supply center will handle the ordering for you (from the sources below), if it does not stock the material.

If you cannot find this fencing in your area, the following sources will give local outlet or ship by mail the fencing indicated in each case. The prices we have quoted are only approximate and do not include freight costs, nor, of course, the cost of any framing materials you may need. It would be best, therefore, to get an exact quotation before ordering:



- Rattancraft of California, 1933 S. Broadway, Los Angeles 7, Calif. (For reed, bamboo slat, whole round pencil-size bamboo.)
- Hyde Park Seed Corp., 15 Park Row, New York, N. Y. (For reed.)
- Bamboo and Rattan Works, 901 Jefferson St., Hoboken, N. J. (For reed, whole round 1″ bamboo.)
- Miya Co., 373 Park Ave. South, New York 16, N. Y. (For sugi bark, bamboo poles.)

For more photographs, please turn the page

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY NORMAN CARVER, JR.

Reed fencing is held here by horizontal braces of bamboo. This is the type of material available to us here, though we would more likely use a framework of lumber as seen in some of the other photographs.

Texture of light and shade is developed by simple line-up of bamboo. Random fall of nodes (joints) and irregularity of poles adds to the interest. This fence is set up along a sidewalk property line in Japan.

Put to architectural use, roll of reed fencing serves perfectly when structural strength and weather-tightness is not a factor. Here it is used to enclose a Japanesque cabana. Light filters attractively through the reed walls (see photograph below). It is supplemented by light from roof-sheltered openings over the wall panels. Owner-designer: Mrs. Henry Calvin.

Interwoven bamboo, made up into panels, is a common fencing material in Hawaii where this photograph was taken. Information on unusual fence panels may be obtained from the importers, United Enterprises, 1923 Bush St., San Francisco 15, Cal. They sell such panels through architects, decorators, dealers.

THE APPRECIATION OF ROCKS AND WATER

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

This is a typical Japanese arrangement: a stone water basin, a lantern, and rocks. The ledge on the right holds a pitcher of hot water in winter. A rock in the lower left corner will hold whatever may be in your hands while you rinse them in the basin. Pebbles at the base represent the "sea." An accoutrement of the tea ceremony, an arrangement like this could be part of any garden.

A murmuring stream, winding below your feet, adds life and movement to what otherwise would be a dull flight of stairs leading from street to house. Small plants and flowers which do not grow too fast or tall edge the path and appear among the crannies of the rocks, urging you to stop along the way to look and listen.

Only a step from the kitchen, this freezer is inside a walled service yard. The kitchen refrigerator's freezing compartment can be filled periodically with whatever frozen foods are needed for the week or the day, thus saving many orders at the market. This is one way a "full house" can add a freezer when there is no more space in the kitchen. Home of Dr. and Mrs. Charles S. Stein, Jr., in Los Angeles, Calif. Philip Wadsworth was the designer.

No room for a freezer?

Garage it separately at the back door

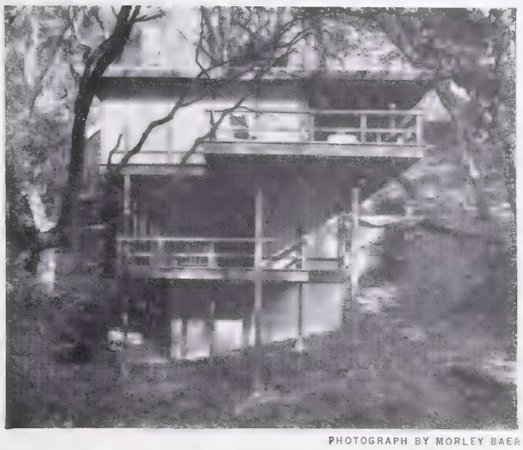
■ For those who want the advantages of having a full-sized home freezer only to realize that they can't fit one into their tight kitchen or garage, here's a solution: Put it in a house of its own at the back door. Then, instead of going to market when the freezing compartment of the refrigerator runs out, you can step out to the freezer to replenish your supply.

The best thing about a freezer is the freedom it gives you to buy large quantities of a food when the price is low. If you followed HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's series on "Chain Cooking," or have discovered freezer cooking on your own, you'll know what a time-saver it is to have whole meals cooked and frozen for future dinners. This takes sizeable freezer space.



When building the "garage" for an outdoor freezer, there are some important precautions to take. Remember that the freezer gives off heat which must be vented to the outside of the structure. Consider outside heat too. If the sun beats down upon the structure, it will add to the freezer's load, so it should stand on the north side of the house or in some place where it will be shaded. Make the structure lockable so unauthorized persons don't have access to it.

Co-ordinating freezer space with other functions normally performed at the back door will keep it from sticking out like a sore thumb. The structure can be designed to fit in with bins for trash cans, a bicycle stand, a garden tool shed, or a privacy screen.

Some of the Japanese principles incorporated into their lives are worth study, particularly the absence of clutter. As we acquire things necessary and things beautiful, we tend to display them and surround ourselves with them. Books, china, paintings, and miscellaneous accessories, acquired a few at a time, begin to multiply through the years. Unless they are arranged with great discipline, this can mean clutter. ## A SMALL HOUSE WITH A STRONG EXPRESSION OF STRUCTURE —and hope to acquire more—but their aim is to maintain the sense of repose that now seems to abound in their house. With the help of well-planned and organized storage, they hope never to be so distracted by possessions that they have stopped "seeing."

The economical system of building specified by the architect has long been known in Japan as the unit system. Supporting posts (here 4" x 6") are used the length of the house at regular intervals. Between these posts are either opaque or translucent panels. These panels, or plate glass panels of the same modular size, are used on all outside walls of this house and are impervious to the weather. Thus there are many well-delineated vertical members, with as many panels between, creating a repetition or rhythm of structural pattern inside and out.

To complete this principle of exposing the structural members, the under side of the pitched roof, with its wide overhangs and central skylight, reveals and exploits the beauty of its materials and form for the appreciation of all who see it.

CONSTRUCTION INFORMATION

This is a post-and-beam house built on a 3½-foot modular unit system. Construction-grade redwood heartwood is used for all beams, posts, roof planking, exposed blocking, battens, copings, fascia, exterior trim, interior trim, shelving, cabinetwork, built-in tables, desks, and seating. Redwood plywood is used for cabinet doors and cabinet backing where required. Two-inch thick tongue-and-groove flooring, exterior decking, and framing which is not exposed is Douglas fir.

Because this house is in the earthquake belt, steel bents (angle reinforcing plates) are bolted to both members where the rafters rest on the main supporting posts. For the same reason, a steel-reinforced, stressed-in-place concrete block system was selected for the basement and foundation walls. The reinforcing stressing bars are attached to the poured, reinforced concrete footings and extend up to the top of the masonry walls and are bolted to stressing plates. The hollows in the blocks are filled with poured concrete.

Solid walls on upper level are 1⅛" thick manufactured panels which have insulating board cores with cement asbestos board on both sides. This forms the finished surface both inside and outside the house. The fireplace is custom-made of ⅛" black sheet iron with a terra cotta chimney flue surrounded by a slightly larger metal flue. Shoji panels were custom-made of clear vertical-grain redwood heartwood. The skylight runs the entire length of the ridge and is custom-made of wireglass resting on special metal channels. Built-up roofing is covered with haydite (gravel). Full length windows, sliding glass transom windows on main floor, and glazed doors are of crystal sheet glass. Single-strength Grade A sheet glass is used for fixed ventilating openings in the block walls. All ventilating openings and windows have fixed screens. Water supply piping is type L copper, and waste and vent lines are standard weight cast iron. As a special soundproofing precaution, water supply lines are insulated with ½" hair felt where they touch framing or pipe hangers.

LESSONS WE ARE LEARNING FROM JAPAN

to find himself surrounded by the out-of-doors, and then turns again to finally enter the living room.

Although we Americans have talked much in recent years about "indoor-outdoor" relationships in residences, as though we had invented the idea, we can learn much about it from the Japanese who, for more than a thousand years, have had a long-practiced and well-developed tradition of uniting the two. Their whole attitude toward life and the universe is based upon a co-operative oneness of man and nature. This is completely foreign to our Western concept of man as apart from and master of nature. Their houses and gardens are one because of their attitude. They feel no compelling need to bring indoors and outdoors together; in their life they have never been separated.

The intermingling of the enclosed living areas and the garden courts in this house reflects something of this attitude. The owners of this house enjoy a close association with nature. Their house is planned so that from any of the major living areas a few steps bring them into a garden. This is typical of a Japanese house.

But this attitude is reflected in more than this intermixing of open and enclosed areas. There is a sympathetic relationship between the natural surroundings and the form and materials of construction, which is perhaps the predominant visual characteristic of a Japanese house. This characteristic comes out of a regard for the nature of materials, vegetable, mineral, and animal.

This regard for the nature of materials has produced a high quality of craftsmanship in Japan which permeates the whole of their lives. The beauty of their buildings depends to a great degree upon the materials used and the thoughtful and careful manner in which they are put together. Every element is made to count in the whole: there is no dependence upon concealing or covering up shoddy workmanship.

There is this element of craftsmanship in this house. The planning of it, particularly the detailing of its parts, is predicated upon good craftsmanship. Without some assurance that the structure of the covered entrance would be skillfully fitted together, it could not have been done in this manner.

This quality of craftsmanship is fast disappearing in our Western world. Our ideal has become a machine-like perfection. The best that can be said for one of our products is that it has been "untouched by human hands"—or at least appears to have been. The slightest evidence of human fallibility mars its perfection. A workman confronted with this attitude gains little satisfaction from the mechanical labor of trying to complete an operation that a machine might do better, assuming there was a machine that could do it. He might well feel that he is a temporary and undesirable substitute for some machine not yet available.

This lack of recognition is not an incentive for quality work. We might expect that subconsciously he might feel some need for working badly as a kind of sabotage of this bright new world from which humanity is ideally—and eventually—eliminated. His objective has ceased to be the "well doing of what needs doing." His object then becomes, quite simply, to get what he can while he can with the hope that it will supply him with some other means of satisfaction—or escape—or at least a reason for existence.

Japan, which, until Perry sailed into Yokohama Bay, has had a long tradition of craftsmanship and reached a high level of culture, might enable us to learn something about the importance of maintaining a crafts tradition if we are to achieve a culture of our own in our own time and place.

CONSTRUCTION DETAILS

This is a wood-framed house built over a basement. Footings, foundations, and basement slab are reinforced concrete. Weathering surface of built-up roof is brown vermiculite gravel. Exterior walls are cement stucco with California redwood trim. Most interior ceilings and walls are plaster on perforated gypsum lath. The entryway ceiling has wood roof decking (exposed on the underside) and beams; the raised ceiling in the entry hall is wood; the study walls are paneled; and the walls in the foyer of the master bedroom suite are covered with bookcases. Finish trim in living areas is redwood; in sleeping and service areas it is Douglas fir.

Flush doors are used in: the servants' bedrooms and baths; the master bedroom, dressing rooms and baths; between the kitchen and the dining room; and for the closets and powder room off the entry hall. Glass panel doors are used in the servants' entry and dining room, the pantry, and the kitchen. Double doors (between courtyard and master bedroom, study and rear courtyard, garden room and master bedroom foyer, entryway and entry hall), and single doors to either side of study fireplace are all custom made. Imported Japanese sliding shoji doors in the garden room are white pine with cryptomeria panels. All exterior window frames are made of Douglas fir.

Oak floors are used in the master suite and study, the living room, the dining room, the maids' bedrooms and hall, the storeroom, and the powder room. Marble floors are used in the two bathrooms in the master suite. Other floors are resilient tile as described below.

Paving in entryway, garden room, exterior courtyards, and terraces is split firebrick stained a meerschaum color. Fences enclosing the courtyard are made of 24"-wide California heartwood redwood planks. Entrance shelter and gates are vertical-grain redwood.

TRANSLATING THE JAPANESE GARDEN INTO AMERICAN TERMS

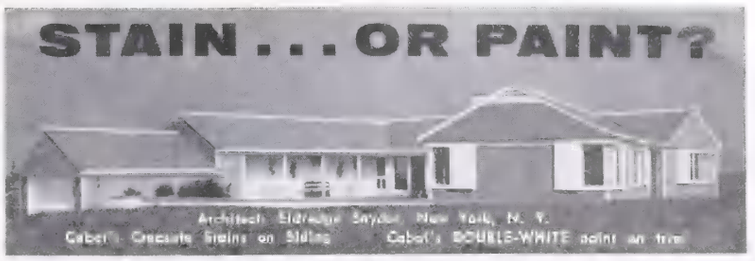
The Japanese garden never reveals itself entirely at once. As you enter through a gateway like this, which is the entrance to a house, an indirect path conceals house and garden from immediate sight, although the plot on which they exist may be small. Framed in the gateway, the entry path acquires a look of distance. Often hedges permit a tantalizing glimpse of the path as it changes its direction toward the house.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

fences obstruct the eye and make the garden appear farther away than it is (this trick of illusion is called sawari, see page 163). Big light-colored leaves close up will make small darker-leafed plants seem farther off in the background. A wall painted a dark color will recede. A natural bark fence may "disappear" altogether. Large rocks in the foreground will make small rocks in the distance seem even more distant.

Borrowed landscape, from a neighbor or the distant hills, is still another way to imply spaciousness. (See this on page 163.)

Interestingness cannot help but happen when the essence of natural materials is intensified. Rocks are placed to accentuate their rocky nature, water placed for the most pleasing contrasts, the most interesting reflections, and for its sounds. If the diagonal element in a garden is water, the grading is built up so that the water flows away from the house.



The movement of the water is interesting in itself and adds depth and mystery as it draws the eye away. (See "The Appreciation of Rocks—and Water," pages 168 and 169.)

In a Japanese garden, plants are pruned to emphasize the character of the tree or bush. A plum branch, for example, will be carefully pruned and trained to trail along a path or brush a stone. Pines are pruned to intensify their low, spreading shape. The essence of the plant's nature is revealed by such pruning so the viewer can experience more intimately the interesting individuality of each growing thing in his garden. (See "The

Nothing exists by happenstance in the Japanese garden, no matter how unplanned and natural it may appear, for it is conceived as one entity, all its parts flowing together. Plants, rocks, pools, and garden artifacts never stand alone, but are visually linked to the other elements, with no harshly defined dividing lines. Stones seem to merge into pebbles, pebbled areas dwindle off into planted spaces, and plantings are used to soften the lines of stones.

For those who are building now or planning to build soon, the hour for decision is approaching. Will it be stain or paint for your home? Be sure to give consideration to both for a house once painted can never be stained . . . and the rustic, natural beauty that only stains provide may be lost forever. Today the trend is toward stains. Here are the reasons why . . .

Cabot's STAINS

New filter traps dirt that others only sift

The new PLIOTRON CR Filter by Goodyear proved a revelation to the laboratory men who put it through exhaustive tests. Here, at last, they found, was an air filter that stops more minute dust particles—particles that sift through many other types.

Filtered Already-Filtered Air. This exceptional filter-power proved itself when a PLIOTRON CR was placed downstream from an ordinary filter in a test air-conditioning installation. After only one day of operation, the PLIOTRON had filtered substantial quantities of fine dirt out of the already-filtered air. All in all, it has proved up to five times more effective.

Not Just a Surface-Loader. Secret of this outstanding effectiveness is the way a PLIOTRON Filter traps dirt throughout its depth—not just on its surface. That's due to a permanent electrostatic action which helps to stop and hold the fine dust the way an electrostatically charged comb picks up bits of paper.

Easiest Filter to Clean. There's never been a filter that was easier to keep clean, either. It never requires the messy reoiling some filters do. In fact, it can be kept at full efficiency with a simple water rinse or even a few passes with a vacuum cleaner.

Lasts for the Life of the System. The new PLIOTRON CR Filter is a really permanent filter, too. With a minimum of care it will serve you for the life of your heating or air-conditioning system. For the whole time-saving, money-saving story, just use the coupon below—or see your heating or hardware dealer.

Magnificent Plant Specimen," pages 164 and 165.)

Fences, always of natural materials such as bamboo or bark (see "Naturalistic Materials for Fences," pages 166 and 167), mask areas in the garden, create private places, and protect the neighbors. Bushes, too, can fill these functions.

Stone lanterns, and figures, water basins, or an arrangement of rocks add still more to the interest of a garden. The artifact marked by weather, will be half-hidden by a low-hanging branch, permitting the spectator to discover for himself the man-made accent. (See "The Man-Made Accent in the Garden," page 170.)

Rocks are arranged like sculpture. They are never placed on top of the ground but deeply set to look as if they had pushed up from below, providing a solid, strong sense of permanence. Rocks are living things to a Japanese for he knows they change with weather and the growth of plants.

The Japanese love the patina of age and encourage it in their gardens by using unpainted wood, allowed—or artificially induced—to weather. Rocks covered with lichens and moss, tiles, rough pottery, twig fences, etc., add to the effect called wabi and sabi.

David Engel, one of the leading landscape architects interpreting Japanese gardening, says: "Going one step further, granted that a (Japanese) garden has logical, economic, and aesthetic unity, if it still lacks a spiritual unity, it has not achieved its final and best purpose. This is the unity which ties the building to its natural environment, and then links the people who live there to both. It means that in the course of living in our house and garden we become a part of it, and it a part of us. This is the unique quality, the ideal of a Japanese garden."

The sum of all these elements in the Japanese garden adds up to a whole much greater than its parts. Through man's intensification of nature, with planning and care, the Japanese gardener and now, we, too, can achieve the shibui garden.

We wish to acknowledge, with thanks, the help of David Engel in the preparation of the material on Japanese gardens. His book, "Japanese Gardens for Today" (Charles Tuttle, $15.00), will be of special interest to anyone seeking further information.

Japanese are connoisseurs of stone and choose their rocks as selectively as Americans choose gems. The large stones at this entry gate serve the same kind of eye-deluding function as the framing gateway—that is, to extend the apparent vista by placing a large object in the foreground.

PHOTOGRAPH BY NORMAN CARVER, JR.

Water plays an important role in the garden, for the pleasure of its sounds, for its cool refreshment and its reflective quality. The path through a garden may lead the walker through a pond or a rivulet, over sunken stepping stones, asymmetrically placed, meandering over the water to the land beyond.

THE MAGNIFICENT PLANT SPECIMEN

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

To support the lower branches of this revered tree, the Japanese have constructed trellis-like arrangements at different heights, giving tender but sure support to the whole branch.

more importance, so also does its presentation. The area in which it is growing is gradually cleared of minor garden elements, and all attention is focused on the star in the center of the stage.

This sensitivity to the problem of presentation finds its counterpart in all facets of Japanese life, but its importance is never more crucial than in the garden. Imagine, if you can, the trees on page 164 surrounded by others, underplanted by shrubs, and backed against the wall of a house. Such a condition would obviously negate the effect it had taken years to produce.

The aim of all the pruning techniques of the Japanese is to give complete control over the shaping of a plant. This control in turn gives them full freedom to shape the plant according to its basic nature—whether it mounds or weeps or reaches upward or spreads out.

How is the pruning done and what does it accomplish? One of the first considerations of pruning is to so thin the tree or shrub that the lower and inner branches will receive enough sunlight to thrive. Left to its own devices, a tree or shrub will fill out at the top while its under side dies out. In a sense, therefore, pruning to achieve the opposite effect might seem to be against nature, yet it is not truly so.

(Please turn the page)

Man-made support like this might seem an artificial intrusion to the Westerner, but it is perfectly normal to the Japanese who look on man as a part of nature and a garden as man's arrangement of natural things.

since the Japanese merely help nature select those parts that are to grow more vigorously. At the same time, this thinning process cuts out enough growth so that the foliage cannot hide the interesting structure of the plant itself.

By maintaining the vigor of the lower branches, the Japanese are able to create the horizontal, spreading shape so often associated with the gardens of Japan. While it is only one of the many plant forms found in their gardens, it is perhaps the most memorable since it introduces the horizontal line—at once pleasing and restful—in areas normally dominated by verticals.

Another key to the Japanese control of plant shapes is their pruning of individual branches. The direction of a branch itself can be controlled by cutting it off just above a bud or another branch. A branch that had been straight now turns or curves in the direction of the bud or the previously subordinate branch. Thus, the Japanese can effect the curve, the twist, and the turn simply by directing the course that the natural growth of the branch will take.

By paying close attention to such pruning details, the Japanese are able to achieve forms that express and exploit the nature of the plants themselves. The resulting plants are distinctive at first glance, but consistently interesting and full of meaning from all angles, no matter how often or how long viewed. It is simply another way in which the Japanese strive for shibui, the highest level of beauty.

Extensive trellis, shaped like a canopy tent, keeps the low-growing limbs of this pine from breaking under the pressure of their own weight.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Far-reaching limbs, characteristic of so many of the artistic trees in Japan, are made possible only by the use of pole supports. Placed at strategic spots, they enable a limb to continue growing out without breaking off. The Japanese are thus able to make a tree go where they want it to go—to develop a form they have decided expresses the intrinsic nature of the tree.

Supporting poles were trees themselves, have simply had their bark removed. Often they are left in their natural state (as above) to weather gray, but occasionally the poles are charred to darken them. In either case they gradually take on an aged look that blends in with the surroundings. Without these supports, this centuries-old tree could never have reached this size or age.

How to give American materials a Japanese accent

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER

Conventional building techniques were used throughout. Cypress-covered frame walls were waxed to emphasize natural grain structure. Batten strips add modular feeling common to Japanese houses. Ceiling beams were stained dark to emphasize structure. Only unusual material is the typically Japanese woven bamboo matting set between roof rafters.

Ordinary materials, commonly used in Florida construction, have been carefully selected for Japanesque effect. Wood shingles, tidewater cypress framing and trim, Florida juniper siding, and cast concrete paving require no special labor skills for installation. Terrace of black concrete rounds set in white marble-chip grout has effect of volcanic stones in pebbles, yet provides a level, easily maintained walking surface.

Standard French doors, glazed with grass-cloth-imbedded plastic and painted black, create the effect of shoji without the cost of custom millwork. Note how ordinary cypress posts have simple chamfered corners creating delicate, yet strong supports for the roof. Posts and all exposed cypress framing under roof were sand-blasted to erode soft grain, then stained greenish-gray for aged appearance.

• In the hands of a sensitive designer, even the commonest American building materials can assume the quiet elegance associated with Japanese architecture. With a sound understanding of Japanese principles, meticulous care in the selection of these materials can substitute for the handcraftsmanship so widely available in Japan (and so difficult to find in America).

In designing this studio for the Byron M. Ramsings, Architect John L. Volk used typical building materials available in the locality (Florida). Standard-size boards and beams of cypress or juniper were used for all exposed woodwork. Ordinary French doors were transformed into shoji by reglazing and painting. Colored cast concrete replaced carved stonework.

This terrace is a successful blending of the Japanese and American points of view. The back river-washed pebbles are from Japan. The flagstone is American, from East Coast sources. The idea of pebbles meandering through the terrace like a lazy stream is Japanese. But the pebbles are hand-set in concrete to make a surface for furniture and easy walking. The outcropping of rock (right) was treated with utmost respect: loose pebbles were used around it to join it to the paving; a few plants merge it with surrounding greenery.

The lure of the irregular

The core of Japanese aesthetics is indirection, the unfinished, the unobvious. Ground patterns in their gardens have this lure

● The appeal of Japanese gardens to Americans is undeniable. But often it is hard for us to rationalize why we are so attracted. For they go about everything just the opposite of how we do it.

When we construct a walk, we use the shortest distance between two points. And we use the same uniform materials from start to finish. Practical, indeed! But not especially interesting. Our walks assume you are in a hurry, that nothing matters but getting where you are going quickly. The Japanese believe that when you are in the garden, hurry is not appropriate: that you should take time to contemplate the beauties of nature. So their paths meander and turn. And the materials and design grammar may change frequently, almost telling you to stop here and notice. They can make a trip through ten feet quite an event.

To achieve this, they study the (Please turn the page)

Changing texture, but using compatible materials, is a good way to get variation while maintaining integration. The strip of small stones under the narrow porch eliminates weeding and trimming, as well as splatter from the rain. Line of larger stones retains gravel while adding to the pattern value.

PHOTOGRAPH BY NORMAN CARVER, JR.

Combination of stones, shaped by natural forces and those shaped by man, suggests the interrelation of man and nature. Note that pattern is only implied at the ends of the walk so the viewer can complete the design in his mind's eye. The stones protrude well above ground level for good drainage.

Square stepping stones mark the path around a building and cross a strip of pebbles that is designed to catch the drip from the roof overhang and eliminate erosion. These overlapping patterns enhance each other. At Katsura Palace.

This pattern of pebbles, rocks, and plants is integrated by similar shapes but varied by their use. Rectangles of the water basin, stepping stones, and bed of pebbles are also related to similar elements in the structure that is nearby.

PHOTOGRAPH BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER

Pebbles in concrete make a walk through solid beds of ground cover, somewhat reminiscent of Japanese technique. The location is New York City, but the idea of creating patterns on the ground is basic to Japanese gardens. Maintenance here is not too demanding; the edges look better if not kept sharp.

proper arrangement of stones with painstaking minuteness. And they arrive at all kinds of counterpoint by the interplay of varying sizes of stones, gravel, and sand. Such attention pays off with unforgettable compositions; once you've seen them, you will never forget where you saw them. That such unforgettable character could be achieved with nothing more than stones, gravel, and sand is hard for us to grasp. It is even more staggering that such immense variety is possible within these few materials. Hundreds of ground-pattern photographs could be published without repetition.

The lure and appeal of these stone and gravel compositions can probably be explained by the fact that the materials are always from nature and the lines mostly irregular. Even though the patterns are arranged by the hand of man, no line is ever straight for long, and even a straight line has broken edges and would be called imperfect by a Westerner. This is nature's own way, so these man-made arrangements look more appropriate than if they were true and perfect.

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER

The mosaic of stones in this walk is carefully and calculatingly composed to be a work of art. And, as you watch your step along the irregular stones, the pattern of the design unfolds, changing as you move. Great diversity of size, shape, and texture of stones gives visual variety to the walk.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY NORMAN CARVER, JR.

These stones recall the river bed from which they came. At the same time they create a strong contrast in texture with the smooth walkway. Stepping stones are reminiscent of a bridge crossing a stream. Water-washed stones are at lower level, thus raising the walk above the "river" as it should be.

How to grow spinach even if you don't like it

Here's romance in the vegetable patch: A man who learned all about spinach for the sake of his beloved

By WILLIAM ALVADORE BUCK

• I'm the first to agree with my wife when she says I owe a great debt to spinach. It was her fondness for this potent potherb that saved her from pellagra some years ago in Spain. It is still a great favorite of hers. And I still acknowledge my obligation by growing it with loving care, although I can't bring myself to eat the stuff.

My wife has served it to me in many guises. I have had it at its freshest, and probably tasted it fifty times. Progress: zero. But I have learned how to grow it.

Old writings note that the Moors brought the leaves to Spain in A.D. 1100. Some centuries passed before we encounter this tribute in English: "The dayly eating of the hearbe spinage doth marvelously profite such having a horse voice, and that hardly fetch breath, if the hearbe after the proper seething and ordering be either fried with sweete butter or the oyle of almonds and that to it pepper brused be wittily added." Thomas Tryon, writing in 1684, probably knew no more than we do how to add "brused" pepper wittily, for he had nothing to say about that, but wrote that if chopped into boiling oatmeal, spinach made "a gallant sublime Pottage," which "chears and comforts the Spirit, breeds good Blood and makes the whole Body lightsom." He warned against letting it boil too long, lest we "destroy the pure volatile Spirits and balsamick Virtues thereof." There, with this fulsome praise, I hope I have discharged a part of my debt.

As a matter of fact, spinach, or Spinacea oleracea, is a pigweed. It belongs to the Goosefoot family which is often called the pigweed family, and is very close in breed to beets, Swiss chard, and the very familiar weed I have always known as lambs' quarters. Some call the latter smooth pigweed. In older times, according to my father, who was quite fond of it, most everyone gathered young lambs' quarters for a pot green in the spring. To me it is just spinach.

Spinach can do well in most soils that are abundantly supplied with humus and quickly available plant food. A sandy loam is best. Some commercial growers choose to plant it in peaty or muck soils because of the sand-in-the-spinach problem, for such earths bounce little sand when the heavy rain drops fall.

This need be no consideration at all for the home gardener who spreads a deep enough mulch. For sandy soils Cornell recommends a fertilizer with an 8-16-16 formula or its equivalent; for loam, 10-20-10; and for muck, 5-10-15. In rainy seasons they advise a light nitrogen side dressing when the seedlings are a couple of weeks old, for nitrogen leaches away faster than other elements. Like all leafy vegetables, spinach must have nitrogen always in store. Without a full supply, that dark green, which is, literally, the outward evidence of the proteins, vitamins, and iron within, will fade, and you will not like your spinach. The pH may be between 6.0 and 7.0

This is another cold-weather crop, hardy, in fact, in climates where the temperature reaches zero. In high summer it quickly shoots a flower stalk and develops an off taste. In southern states, below Norfolk, Virginia, both backyard and commercial growers grow it chiefly in winter. In the North the first planting can be very early and you can continue succession planting until early May. In fact, you could sow your seed any time in the winter on ground that was spaded in the fall, even on the snow, and let the leaves make their own way with the weather. I have done this successfully with lettuce—more for bragging purposes than to serve any urgent end—but I have never tried it with spinach. If your climate is not more northerly than New York City or somewhat above, here's another approach: Three weeks before the date of your autumn killing frost, sow the seed, either in a cold frame or the open garden. It will grow through Indian summer. If it has some mulch airy enough to admit a little light, it will live and give you vitamins very early, even in the cruelest month, which is, said T. S. Eliot, April. A cold frame sowing may be covered and forced into production before crocus time.

HOW TO GROW SPINACH

In our climate, we can still seed for the autumn crop as late as the end of September. Spinach is a short-season crop, maturing in 40 to 50 days. Plant the seed about a half-inch deep. The plants should stand three inches apart and the rows eighteen inches apart.

In Queen Elizabeth's time and probably clear back into the "old Egyptian night," spinach had smooth arrow-shaped leaves, but the popular modern varieties are broad in leaf and more or less crinkled. Bloomsdale Long Standing has long been recommended for spring planting; Virginia Savoy, Virginia Blight Resistant, and the giant of all, Nobel, for fall. Hybrid 7 is good in both seasons. America is a favorite for late spring. America and Nobel, latecomers, have won all-America silver medals. We need medals for everything these days, it seems, even spinach.

FOR THOSE who must have spinach, even in summer, there is a leaf which is not spinach at all, though it is called New Zealand spinach—Tetragonia expansa. The leaves sparkle with white spots, and hence it has also been called New Zealand ice plant. It is a tropical, native to the lands around the South Pacific, which flourishes in the heat and blackens to death in frost. If the cook knows her business and really likes the taste, she can easily give New Zealand the spinach flavor.

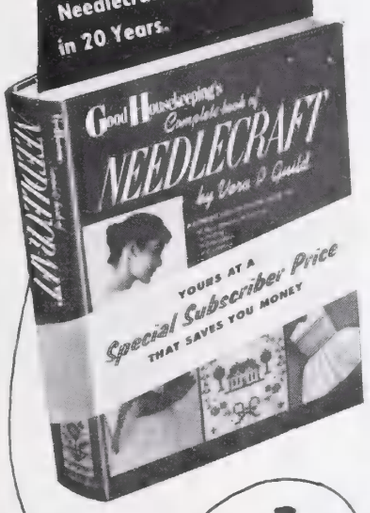
To the gardener New Zealand has several advantages over S. Oleracea. It has about the same needs except for space. One authority says the plants might stand eight inches apart, another twelve, and so on up to three feet.

I have not discovered an authority who seems to know for sure, but I have seen the plant, and at maturity the branches, which lie prostrate, cover an area larger than a card table, so give it room.

Of course, you keep clipping it on the cut-and-come-again system. For the ground occupied, it will greatly outyield our domestic pigweed over the season. It takes about 70 days to mature, so, for our climate, the best plan might be to start the seed indoors late in March and set out the plants after danger of frost is past. It transplants easily. It is slow in germinating unless you soak the seed in water for two or three days before planting it. Spinach has a few enemies and catches a disease or two, but New Zealand thrives in health with little care. It collects less sand on its leaves than spinach does. Altogether it is an ideal subject for the lazy gardener or the neophyte, and will produce abundantly on this plan from early June until its doomsday finally comes in the autumn night.

Spinach is not so generous. Some six or seven weeks after sowing, the herb is not mature, but at its best for the table. You cut off or pull up the entire plant. Do not neglect it until it sends up its seed stalk, for the stalk is no ornament to the garden.

NOT LONG ago the Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station conducted an experiment using spinach to explore a theory which we have often raised in these pages. They tested the taste of the thrips. A thrips (the same, singular or plural) is a small insect that's sometimes a serious pest on fruits, vegetables, flowers, and field crops. Thrips injury has been called white blast, for the surface of the leaf whitens with flecks as the thrips feed their way.



These Missouri thrips were not given a choice of whether or not they liked spinach, but were penned in a greenhouse with nothing else to eat. Some insects, will die rather than eat a leaf they do not like. The thrips had this free choice: whether to feed on underfed sickly leaves or healthy ones. The spinach was planted in soils with sixteen formulas, which varied in their content of two elements, calcium and nitrogen. The other elements needed were present in constant amounts.

The thrips liked the undernourished and practically ignored the well-fed. They invariably attacked the plants that were lighter green, and on the same plant chose the older mature leaves, preferring them to the younger leaves that were higher in nitrogen. In general, said the report of the experiment, as long as the crop made vigorous and luxuriant growth it was practically immune to the rasp of the thrips. Not one of the plants that was well fed with nitrogen was noticeably damaged.

Some garden seers, particularly J. I. Rodale, prophet of the organic gardeners, have been preaching for years that the only way to defend the garden against the insect swarms was to keep the soil well nourished with organic decay and the crop, therefore, thriving.

As I have said before, I have tried to carry this message to the Mexican bean beetle, the tomato aphid, cabbage looper, and many another bug and slug, but they do not hear, and the only way I have been able to convince these hard conservatives is with death on the leaf. On the other hand, I have also noted cases where certain pests did seem to choose the poorer plants, and the theory does not seem to be entirely fancy work.

OUR science knows only a little of all there is to know about growing things, and perhaps in time we will find some way to make the theory work more widely. In this region of the mind we must keep the door wide open, for we do not know when a draught of fancy may turn into the spring breeze of fact.

However, note that the Missouri spinach event had nothing to say in the dispute between the all-organic and the chemical fertilizer people. I do believe that spinach can be well fed and healthy, even where there are handfuls of store-bought plant food in the soil.

There is one condition that spinach cannot endure: any considerable amount of DDT in the earth.

Two or three of Nature's hoodlums have an appetite for spinach and occasionally do some damage. Aphids and flea beetles are the most likely visitors in most places, though in some regions the leaf hopper can be the worst, for it carries spinach yellows and, also, in the dry highlands of the West, curly top. Spinach can come down with a case of curly top from a sugar beet, inoculated by a leaf hopper, in four hours. Curly top is a lethal virus disease, which appeared a few years ago in the beet fields around Colorado, and for a time put whole regions out of the sugar trade. Research found resistant varieties, however, putting the fields back into business.

Spinach is also occasionally subject to damping off, a blight, blue mould, and downy mildew. Leaf miners can be quite destructive, but there is nothing I can recommend against them, except to pull off damaged leaves and burn them. The regular remedy against leaf miners is DDT, and I certainly will not spray any leaf I intend to eat with DDT, even though Dr. W. J. Hayes of the Public Health Service says it is one of the safest insecticides ever developed.

The case is not so difficult as it may appear in the last paragraph. You may well get through the season with little fuss and temper. Here is a program for the gardener who wants to do right by his spinach in all things. First, call your county agent or your seedsman, if he knows his business, and find out what the spinach williwaws are on your soil. If there is much disease, plant resistant varieties, perhaps Dixie Market or Hybrid 7 for the spring crop and Virginia Blight Resistant for the fall. Plan a rotation of several years if you can. Keep down the pigweed or lambs' quarters where plagues and pests may develop in strength. Treat your seed against damping off with phygon, thiram, or captan. Every gardener should have a packet of one of these fungicides on his shelf—where children can not get at it.

THE only insecticides I am ready to recommend are tobacco, nicotine, or rotenone, all in the form of dusts, which will wash off pretty well. Nicotine products have long been used on aphids and leaf hoppers, and the flea beetle never likes to dine with dust on his feet, so any kind of dust will keep him working on the pigweed next door.

If you can bear to be without spinach for a while next spring, it might be as well to depend on New Zealand for your main crop, so to speak, and sow regular spinach this fall for the early spring. New Zealand is as trouble-free as a crop can be and the bugs and blights, being dormant, will surely leave your winter spinach alone. Thus, next year, you will have an early crop and ample cuttings from July 1 till summer is gone.

Practically, philosophically, and romantically I wish I enjoyed spinach. I have no pride of taste against it. It seems to me that people who pride themselves on the number of things they dislike and turn away from, with their superiority showing, have a wrong-headed view of life. They miss a lot in blind denial. Moreover, I have always yearned for the "Body lightsom." I can use a few of those "balsamick Virtues" as well as the next man.

Stepping stones set in the water are given serious artistic attention. And there's pleasure in seeing reflections move as the wind ruffles the water in contrast to the immobility of the stone steps.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Integration of this pattern on the ground is due to the similarity of the smooth round stones. If the parts of a design are similar, you can vary the outline in many different ways and still maintain over-all unity. To reduce the need for frequent trimming, the combination of stone and plant material should utilize plants not needing mowing. Small succulents would be a good choice for this treatment.

The deep rich pile of the moss in this garden is accented by the way in which the stones are set below the surface. It is as if their weight has sunk them down into the soft velvety moss.

Not all Japanese ground patterns have a soft, diffuse look. This one is quite geometric, but it avoids sterility because of the many textures and patterns combined here. Gravel, rough stone, smooth stone, and sand (marked with a wood-toothed rake) also have the unity of being one basic material (rock) in various forms—all familiar to us, but different.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY NORMAN CARVER, JR.

Very elegant and sophisticated patterns can be achieved with sand, stone, and gravel used in varying combinations. Raked sand is practical in areas where there is no foot traffic. Recommended for small, secluded, looked-at spots, rather than walked-in spaces. There is pleasure in being creative with a rake.

H. H. SCOTT COMPONENTS...

A wonderful new way to enjoy stereo in your home

H. H. Scott, the world's foremost manufacturer of high fidelity equipment, brings your family a new way to enjoy beautiful stereo music in your home . . . the same way most record reviewers, professional musicians and critical music listeners have chosen. This new way uses separate components . . . an amplifier, a radio tuner, a record player and speakers . . . which plug together to make up a music system of unsurpassed quality designed to your individual needs.

H. H. Scott Components Give You The Best Sound
Only an H. H. Scott component stereo system can bring the full beauty of the actual performance into your living room. Musicians, engineers and connoisseurs agree that the technical excellence of an H. H. Scott component system gives sound reproduction far superior to that obtained from ordinary stereo consoles.

H. H. Scott Components Can Fit Into Any Room Setting
You can place components anywhere . . . in handsome cabinets available at your local hi fi dealer or in antique or modern furniture you already own.

H. H. Scott Components Are Easy To Install
Your nearby H. H. Scott dealer will help you select the right components for your needs. If you desire he can make the complete installation for you. Actually the installation of H. H. Scott components is so simple that you can do it yourself in minutes.

H. H. Scott Components Are Easy To Use
The only switches and knobs you'll need to use with any regularity are the off-on switch and the volume control. On some occasions using a few others will improve your music — but you learn how and when in minutes from H. H. Scott's convenient illustrated operating-guide.

H. H. Scott Components Are Easy To Own and Available Everywhere
H. H. Scott dealers offer convenient budget terms, as little as $35 down. Prices for their superb complete systems range from as unbelievably low as $350 to over $1000.

You have never seen a carpet that harmonizes color like this!

You've seen solids. You've seen patterns. You've seen tweeds. But Cabin Crafts Country Spice colors in carpet made with ACRILAN® are something else completely! With solids, the rest of the room must go with that exact solid shade. With patterns, you're even more limited. But Country Spice colors harmonize your other furnishings—actually tie everything else in the room together. Why is that? Because each strand of yarn is itself a mixture of four different colors. Take "Fennel Blue" Country Spice carpet shown here with a pile of 80% Acrilan acrylic fiber and 20% modacrylic. It's a mixture of blue, green, aqua and lavender. Hold it against any furnishings in these same color families—it goes beautifully. It's all because the colors are spun together in the yarn—not just worked together in the carpet as individual color strands! The result is the heathery look you see here—much more versatile than patterns or tweeds. On the next two pages are decorating ideas in Cabin Crafts Country Spice carpet. Take a look.

For a new kind of decorating harmony, start with Country Spice colors, a better idea in rugs and carpets...

Decorating becomes foolproof when you select a carpet in one of Cabin Crafts new Country Spice colors. Each color is made up of four different colors blended together by Cabin Crafts exclusive new process. So, for absolute harmony in your decorating scheme, just pick up the original colors that went into your carpet and repeat them throughout your room . . . in fabrics and paints and accessories. They are sure to blend beautifully together. You simply can't go wrong.

You find a range of these exciting colors in Cabin Crafts new Country Spice carpet at your store. Another beauty of this carpet is its behavior. It has Acrilan's® resilience and crush-resistance. Even coffee or grease clean up with detergent suds. Country Spice carpets with Acrilan acrylic and modacrylic pile cost about $13.95 a sq. yd. ## Lichfield by Wedgwood: This is English Provincial, fresh from the gardens of the manor

Baskets of mushrooms. Hedges clipped and precise. Great trees idling along a road. And rising out of a sweep of flowers, the manor with its oak and brass and silver . . . cultivated, serene. This is English Provincial; now Wedgwood brings it to the table. You see it here in Lichfield where rich tawny flowers ring a shining white plate: it is well-ordered, free, welcoming breakfast or banquet. Concrete shell roof of this striking home in Parker, Colorado, gives dramatic evidence of countless new effects being achieved with modern concrete. Owner, Dr. John P. Evans, says, "With concrete, we have a home that's friendly and livable as well as interesting."

There's far more living with living concrete

Today, concrete offers so much that's new . . . makes living more pleasant and satisfying in so many ways.

Concrete in a whole array of new shapes, colors and textures can bring you a home of striking beauty and charm—such as the Evans'. For families all over the country, living concrete means a more gracious, comfortable way of life.

Living concrete, too, can mean sophisticated, maintenance-free floors of terrazzo. Or inlaid with bright pebbles—an intriguing patio. It can be a family swimming pool, a walk or garden wall with special character and interest. A driveway, too, can become glamorous with concrete.

Let your imagination run free. With modern concrete . . . colors, contours, textures are unlimited! Concrete can make a dramatic difference in your living at moderate cost. Write for free booklet: "Concrete for Outdoor Living." (U.S. and Canada only.)

America's most popular TV comes in TV's most beautiful cabinets

Here, in Zenith cabinetry, is the new elegance in fine furniture—the good design of authentic styling details, craftsmanship in the selection and finishing of woods. Above, for example, is the distinguished French Provincial styling of the Zenith Touraine, Model F3385, from the Zenith Decorator Group. In genuine cherry fruitwood veneers and solids, $575.00*.

And here are the Zenith features that give you the world's most carefree TV performance:

Zenith Space Command® remote control TV tuning lets you tune TV without getting up. Just touch a button on the control unit you hold in your hand. Silent sound turns TV on and off, changes channels, adjusts volume—even shuts off sound while the picture stays on. No cords, no wires, no batteries. Not an extra-cost accessory—it's built right in.

The Zenith handcrafted chassis: this year's most advanced TV is still made mainly by hand. At Zenith the TV chassis is carefully wired and soldered by hand. Zenith believes this is the only way to be sure you get the most dependable TV performance—the greatest possible freedom from service headaches.

Zenith's new Glare-Ban Screen substantially erases glare and room reflections. This startling new tube face virtually soaks up highlight reflections. Reflections of a lighted table lamp or of a window in daylight are wiped away.

ZENITH RADIO CORPORATION, CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS. IN CANADA: ZENITH RADIO CORPORATION OF CANADA, LTD., TORONTO, ONT. The Royalty of television, stereophonic high fidelity instruments, phonographs, radios and hearing aids. 42 years of leadership in radionics exclusively.

LOOK WHAT GAS IS DOING NOW!

The new LENNOX Landmark

gives you healthful heat in every room at the setting of a single dial!

Comfort with economy, too—because it's Gas!

NEW CONVENIENCE with modern Gas! Set just one centrally-located thermostat—and spend all your nights and days in just-right temperature. Wake up each morning with no need for furnace tending, secure in the knowledge that your Lennox is automatically controlling the climate of every room in the house.

PRODUCT OF LENNOX INDUSTRIES, INC., MARSHALLTOWN, IOWA.

NEW COMFORT with modern Gas! All the rooms of all the house stay comfortable all Winter long with clean, healthful, uniform and comfortable heat for all the family. No worry about fuel delivery failure, either. Dependable Gas is piped right into your home.

NEW ECONOMY with modern Gas! Lennox "blocks of comfort" give you the monthly savings of nature's thriftiest fuel, and let you save two more ways. No need for expensive wiring—and your heating contractor can tailor-fit a Lennox unit to your house, your needs.

COMPACT—AS ONLY A GAS HEATING UNIT CAN BE! Building or remodelling, you'll find that a Gas heating unit will save you lots of expensive space! It can fit in a closet, an alcove, even in waste under-stair space . . . and it's so clean you can put it anywhere in the house without worry!

AUTOMATIC—AS ONLY A GAS HEATING UNIT CAN BE! Name the advantage, and Gas heat has it. Absolutely automatic Clean, silent. Dependable. Space and money saving. Handsomely designed, so you can turn a "furnace room" into a playroom, tool-filled workshop, or family room!

Hiding its real depth destroys the bed-like appearance of this couch, makes it look permanently built-in. Bed is on casters, can be rolled out for sleeping (below). But for daily use as a couch about a foot of it lies under the bookshelf (see drawing right), which keeps the bolster pillows well forward. This cuts the sitting almost in half. The shelves at each end of the sofa make good arm rests for reading with feet up.

Built-in furniture by day —bed by night

The only way to make a bed comfortable as a couch is to kill some of its depth. Sliding part of this bed under a counter put the back where it was needed

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Ready for an overnight guest, the bed has been rolled out from underneath the bookshelf to make use of its full depth. Bolster pillows store tidily behind it for the night (sketch at right). The bed can be rolled all the way out on the tile floor to be made up. The built-in "arm rest" adds another bonus for sleeping: The pillow won't slide off in the middle of the night.

Look! Cascade's dramatic water-sheeting action ends spots, streaks and film!

Means sparkling dishes like this . . .

Only Cascade contains Chlorosheen to change water drops into clear-rinsing "sheets" . . . stops spotting as no other leading detergent can! You'll see a sparkling clean difference when you put Cascade in your machine. These dramatic photos show why. Notice how the water on the plate at left is rinsing off in clear "sheets" to slide away food particles and grease. No water drops left behind to dry into messy spots and film! Cascade's exclusive Chlorosheen is the secret. Cascade with Chlorosheen in your dishwasher will mean visibly cleaner dishes and silverware, visibly brighter glassware. For best results, always get Cascade.

News and notes in the decorating field from the pages of a decorator's case book

Dear Mrs. MacLeod, for reasons I shall never understand, sublet the furnished apartment of one of her daughter's "advanced" friends for a year. After one month within its sparse off-white purlieus, sleeping on a pad four inches off the floor, struggling in and out of a low canvas chair, she finally came running to me.

"It's not only uncomfortable," she explained. "It's blank. I certainly want to jack up that mattress on a boxspring, and I shall be delighted to contribute an upholstered chair. But how can I get some pattern into the place that I can enjoy looking at without completely overhauling everything?"

Implied, of course, was that she didn't want to make a major investment of it, either. And that wasn't going to be simple. Because it turned out that her modernist young landlady had a taste for the understated elegant—so rigidly understated that you'd have to know something about price tags to recognize it. The Italian raw silk on the draperies and the fitted mattress cover looked about as startling as a bowl of instant oatmeal; walnut frame and leather strapping of the canvas chair were meticulously hand-crafted; the shaggy off-white rug was hand-loomed natural wool, but to appreciate these fine points you had to look close and with greater understanding than Mrs. MacLeod could muster.

"I don't want to make any drastic changes, but if we could get something we could stick on and take off again next January when that poor child moves back in. Oh, I do feel sorry for her mother. She collects Sheraton, you know, and has some of the best Sèvres in the country. . . ."

That, too, figured. Nymphs and fawns and too much marquetry had probably driven the girl to this austerity, but she'd brought her mother's sense of quality with her.

But as Mrs. MacLeod pondered the wayward tastes of the young, I was coming to grips with the problem. Indeed there was hardly a soft line or an ornamented surface in the room, from the plain, pinch-pleated draperies and the snugly zippered mattress slipcover to the long, faintly tawny-streaked white marble slab table that stood chastely against an oyster-white wall. (For dining, I supposed, out of laboratory beakers and crystallizing dishes, although I suspect that that chemical gambit may now be passé among the avant-garde.) At the moment the table was graced by a tortured sculpture of metal wire, and a lone white geranium, obviously one of Mrs. MacLeod's efforts to make herself feel at home.

"Suppose," I said, looking at the draperies, "we took the liberty of loose-stitching some braid trimming along the sides and bottoms of these draperies and gave them a braid-trimmed valance?

"In fact, we could solve practically all our problems with a new flat braid that comes in a kind of timeless, cleaned-up scroll design. It will treat your eye to some color and pattern until January comes, and then we'll just snip the threads, pull it off, and our girl will never be the wiser!"

The idea worked smooth as cream. The Conso flat braid I had in mind comes in two widths—2" and 4"—in six colors on a white background. We chose a tawny, toasty shade, used the narrow width to outline the draperies. We had a straight valance made to match the draperies and trimmed it by running a center strip of the wider braid along its length. We used the broad braid to trim the tailored skirt we had made for the new box spring, and "framed" the mattress slipcover with a trim of two-inch braid, carefully beveling the braid at the corners. We used the braid again to frame-border three large square cushions which sit on the bed against the wall like a sofa back.

With these life-saving companion braids and a small MacLeod-size armchair upholstered in an iridescent orange and green Thai silk, we broke the dead white and humanized the place without creating any incongruities. I did park the wire sculpture in the coat closet, and gave the marble table a line-up of white geraniums in shiny brass pots.

Mrs. MacLeod, who had formerly looked as if Whistler's Mother had wandered into a Mondrian, now seems to belong in her background. The braid is not a lost investment, either, because it is washable spun rayon and can be dunked clean and used again when the time comes to remove it. But my guess is that the avant-garde lady will want to keep things as they are.

"I have," began Mr. Nestor, ticking off his belongings almost apologetically, "an old oak chest—almost black—Jacobean, I think—and a refectory table quite like it; and a collection of Daumier prints—pretty good, I think. You see, these things were in the family. But I don't want my flat to look like a museum."

He had hired a great two-story studio-room with a skylight and an iron staircase that led up to a balcony, which he planned to use as a bedroom. He was not, it developed, an artist, but a lawyer who often studied at home and went arty on week ends and holidays.

HERE ARE SOME OF THE MATCHLESS SUPERIORITIES OF THE IMPERIAL STEREO THEATRE

The Imperial Automatic Record Player The perfect precision mechanism that will play your records without distortion and handle them automatically with greater care than human hands. Records retain all their musical quality, even after 1000 plays in normal use—Diamond stylus exerts only 1/10 oz. pressure, yet tracks true, lasts a lifetime. Always on true pitch—"wow" and "flutter" are eliminated—turntable speed is certified within plus or minus 1% of absolute. Won't jam, even if you move tone arm. Changes all size records in 7 sec.; can't damage them.

20 watts undistorted audio power—powerful stereo amplifier gives full bass and treble separation, eliminates intermodulation distortion.

Two 1,000 cycle exponential treble horns—(one for each stereo channel) project mid-range and treble tones bi-angularly for maximum stereophonic separation; provide purest tonal reproduction.

Bass is reproduced through two 15" high-efficiency woofers, projected from each side of the cabinet and reflected from the room walls. Since the extremely high frequencies so essential to preserving the timbre of the music are projected from the front, you get full tonal fidelity with complete stereo separation anywhere in the room.

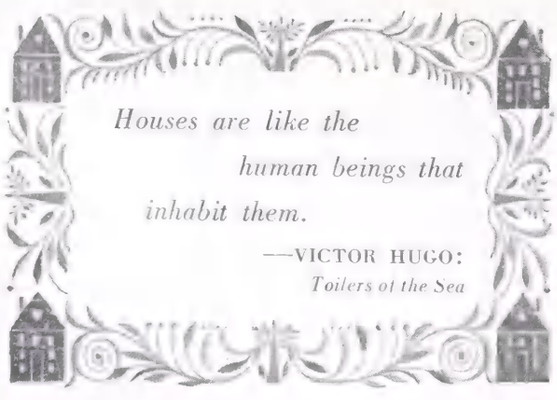
And from all accounts he did a fair share of entertaining. So this vast one room had to perform a lot of functions—living, dining, library, and studio.

The old oak chest turned out to be an understatement, as did the refectory table. They were both enormous regal-size pieces. The top cabinet of the chest could have stored my entire wardrobe. It was destined to serve as a combination bookcase and art supply cupboard. And the lower cabinets could easily hold dinnerware for twelve settings. You could stack a year's supply of magazine subscriptions on one end of the table and still have room for a sit-down dinner!

But what delighted me most when I saw this black oak against the room's white plaster walls was that here was the most appropriate chance I'd come across to use a fabric and wallpaper combination I'd been drooling over since I first saw it in the Gian Matrix showroom. Someone with tongue in cheek had dubbed the pattern "Jack-o-bean," but there's nothing whimsical about it. It is in fact a most dignified, if modernized, rendering of the inevitable pomegranate and acanthus that show up in the "tree of life" pattern that goes traditionally with Jacobean oak. But its freshness comes from its unusual printing. Hand-printed in black on white—on both wallpaper and matching fabric—it has something of a Japanese quality because the imprint blurs off, or "smudges" interestingly like the fading-off strokes of a calligraphy brush or the blurred lines of a charcoal sketch. Since there's nothing shy about the pattern, it needs an outsize room. In fact, its darkness tends to cut down the apparent vastness of a too-big room to something like livable size.



My tricky way of having the fun of using this unusual pattern in both paper and fabric—and giving my client an appropriate room into the bargain—was to drape the high windows with the print on a heavy linen, and to hang it in draw-curtains from the ceiling of the balcony to create privacy for the sleeping area. I used it also to slipcover two deep armchairs and the cushion of the window seat. The stuff looks pretty stylish in conjunction with a white Moroccan rug and a modern sofa covered in black felt and set against a white-painted wall where the print collection hangs.

The other end of the room under the skylight is the studio-dining department. This needed some distinguished visual breaking point between this area and the rest of the room. So I let the wallpaper indicate this, using it on one complete wall and continuing it for a short distance on each adjoining wall. Only I didn't use the print on wallpaper but on paper-backed burlap, which tends to play up even more the blurry quality of the pattern.

The broad window here is draped in white linen and the great old chest and the impressive old table stand against the wall on either side of it. For table seating I bought one long dark oak bench and two simple open-arm armchairs completely covered, frame and all, in the shrillest mustard-color leather I could find.

The entire floor of the room is covered in vinyl tile in mustard-gold, which we've left uncarpeted at this end. It makes a bright spot under the cool north light of the skylight, and permits the owner to pursue his artistic bent with paint and turpentine without danger of wreaking havoc on a rug.

It's as well received a job as I've ever done. Seems to me that I've already told fifty people who have asked about it that the fabric is 54″ wide, the print may be done on

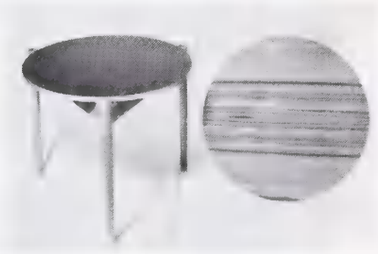
If Mrs. Clarkson weren't so young and pretty she'd remind me of the old woman who lived in a shoe. She had so many children—five boys, including twins, all under the age of ten—that she really didn't know what to do, especially about bedding them down adequately and giving them a place to play in her newly acquired house. Two of the boys are unexpected additions—nephews who have been parked suddenly with the Clarksons for a year, while their parents are off in some obscure mountain area in South America.

The new house, built on three levels, was adequately bedroomed for the Clarksons' own needs. But the new arrivals have caused a change in plans. It has been decided to turn the ground-level playroom into a dormitory for five, because it's an ample room with an outside terrace and delicious tract of woods where the kids can run, climb, get themselves soggy with mud, and generally live the life of little boys. The floor is asphalt tile and there's a lavatory and shower handy for rinsing them off before they get loose in the rest of the house.

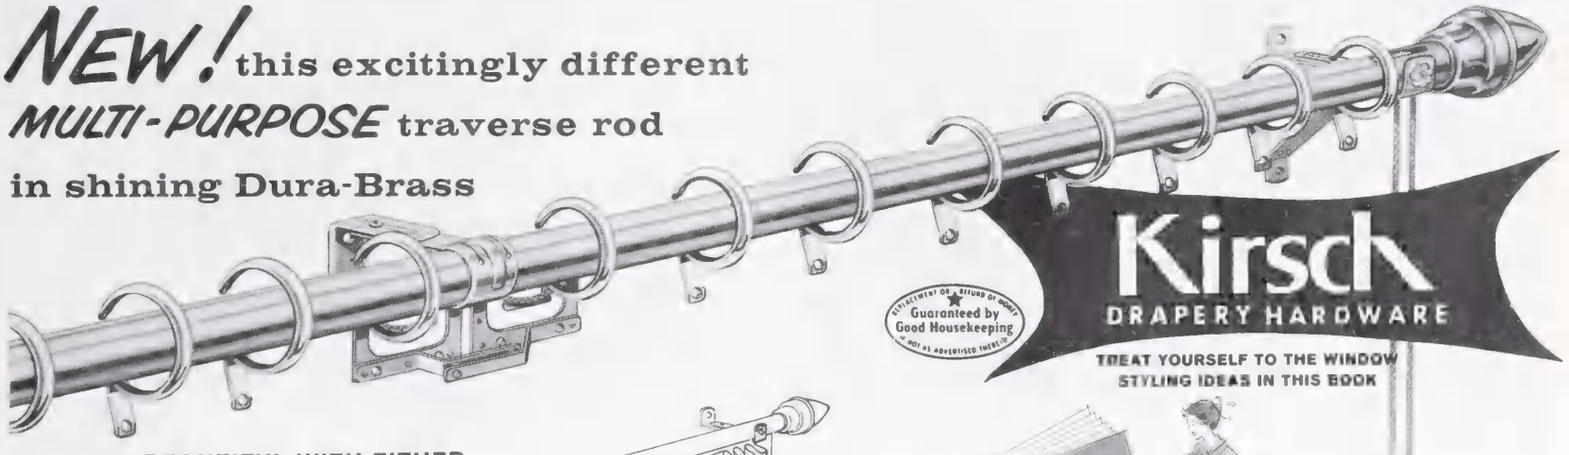
But after all, there is a space limit here, and to cope with this we've put four of the youngsters into a pair of two-tier stack beds. So that the fifth, the youngest, will have no feeling of inferiority about sleeping in a normal bed, he's ensconced in a bed that has the novelty of a pull-out trundle underneath. This provides extra sleep space for a dear friend, should he happen to spend the night.

For their hanging clothes, we've given them steel lockers, finished in charcoal gray, which may sound institutional, but the Clarksons believe that they're a good investment against future days when they'll use them in a summer camp. Along the wall a line of painted gray-blue chests have been arranged like three knee-hole desks, with a continuous plastic top running like a counter for study space. They're set up with three plain straight-back birch chairs.



But still and all, there was something too communal about that counter, and every boy should have a table and chair of his very own. In limited space we could see that this would pose a problem. But by good chance, I happened upon a catalog of Scandicrafts, a firm which imports well-made accessory furniture pieces from Scandinavia. Studying a group of round stacking Danish tables, I saw a way to give each boy a table and chair of his own, solve the space problem, and give the Clarksons some more future-usable furniture.

The tables are teak (or they can also be walnut), 16″ high, and inset with flip-tops—black or white melamine plastic on one side, wood on the other—19″ in diameter. They were not by any means designed to be "work tables" but what with the way kids sprawl on the floor these days, they work out quite handily when there are jobs of crayoning, bug-dissecting, and similar chores to be done. And, above all, they are sittable, so each one has his own chair. They're kept in a stack in one corner of the room. We've gone so far as to label each with a little painted symbol, the way they do children's belongings in Denmark—a ship means Richard, a plane means Danny, a dog means Tom, and so on. And we've carried out this labeling system on the doors of the lockers, too.



The tables are a big success on another count, too. It just so happens, when the Clarksons are entertaining on the terrace, that extra tables or perches are frequently in demand. On these occasions the boys, with great pride, contribute their tables to the company, carrying them easily out to the terrace, for they are not at all heavy or hard to manage. They come also in solid teak or walnut with fixed, non-flipping tops.—M.G.

The first public offering in eight months of a magazine which aims to be the most beautiful in the world:

HORIZON

HORIZON is a big (9¼" x 12¼", 136 or more pages), bi-monthly magazine in book form — with hard covers and no advertising. Temporarily, you may try a year's subscription at a lowered rate — $6.75 less than the same six issues if bought singly — by returning the postpaid form stapled at the right.

Have you met HORIZON yet? Perhaps it's time you did, as this strikingly different magazine in book form begins its third year.

For it's only once or twice a year, in a few such compatible surroundings as this, that the publishers (the same who publish AMERICAN HERITAGE, The Magazine of History) invite new subscriptions. Your invitation to try HORIZON, as the form inserted here indicates, is a good one – embellished with a lowered rate, prepaid postage and an easy way to pay.

What's different about it?

A bi-monthly, HORIZON unites art and ideas, the sum of which is culture, in a fresh format: superb illustration, hard covers, no advertisements at all. It is printed here and abroad by three methods on three textures of paper. It is probably the most beautiful magazine in the world.

HORIZON seeks to serve as a guide to the long cultural adventure of modern man: to explore the many mansions of the philosopher, the painter, the historian, the architect, the sculptor, the satirist, the poet; to create a "museum without walls" for man's finest achievements in the visual arts; to build many bridges between the worlds of scholars and the minds of intelligent readers.

To this end, the articles range the centuries and the globe. Pictures, often in color, light almost every page: sculpture, maps, buildings, mosaics, cartoons, people from the Negev to the stage – lively art from cave drawings to movie palaces.

What can HORIZON do for you?

Nothing aggressively uplifting, or fashionable, or urgent. There's no counsel on how to manage your money or your ballot, your casserole or your spouse.

There is food for thought, play for the imagination, for any reasonably inquisitive mind. And you'll discover, as 160,000 people already have, that every issue fits in well with your home's more cherished books, as part of a purposefully elegant, permanent collection of the arts.

To try HORIZON, tentatively (you may cancel at any time, without penalty), mail the form inserted between these pages. If it's gone, the address is 551 Fifth Avenue, New York 17, N. Y. Look through your first issue before you send a cent. Then we shall ask for $1.95 to begin, $5 a month for the next three months. (HORIZON is regularly $3.95 a copy, $18 a year –necessarily expensive, but not extravagant for a magazine equivalent in quality to a $10-$15 book.) The lower price lasts only as long as our supply of the current issue*, and that won't be long. Good idea to mail the form today.

*Some highlights of the September HORIZON (pictured below): Ingmar Bergman on Why I Make Movies; John Kenneth Galbraith on the arts in an affluent society; The Louvre, a history, with a portfolio of master works; The Coming of the White Man as portrayed by other cultures; articles by Russell Lynes, Jean Stafford, Walter Terry, many others.

Your Great-Grandmother's were Wamsutta, too!

In so many fine houses, the Wamsutta linen tradition dates back to a great-grandmother. Many had Wamsutta sheets in their bridal hope chests a century ago. It's not surprising when you consider that Wamsutta has been making the finest sheets in the land since 1846. If you haven't inherited the Wamsutta habit, you ought to cultivate it. It costs just a little more...and it's vastly satisfying. Stroke Wamsutta SUPERCALE®. It's a petal caress. As smooth, as lustrous, as silky as silk. Sleeping on SUPERCALE is pure delight...the most pampered way you can sleep. Illustrated "Gloriette" pattern is from the Vienna Revival collection of sheets and coordinated Heritage towels. See SUPERCALE colors, stripes and prints at fine stores. Also DEBUCALE®, the Wamsutta luxury sheet priced for young home-makers.

Museums collect it (why shouldn't you?)

You should. Royal Worcester isn't expensive, really. Considering it's the finest English bone china. Considering that 5-piece place settings start at $12.75. You pay as much for good domestic china, but it seems ivory-yellow beside Royal Worcester's whiteness. Most of all, though, museums marvel at its moonlit translucence, its bell-like resonance. You will, too. Yet it's remarkably hard and chip-resistant for practical collectors like you. Find your pattern—traditional or contemporary—at fine jewelry, specialty or department stores. Or send 25c to Royal Worcester, 11 E. 26th Street, New York 10, N. Y. (or 13 Elm Street, Toronto) for the booklet "How to Choose Fine China . . . its Use and Care," plus color pamphlets of all patterns.

BALLOT BOX GREETING

Order No. 51.

You'll win the nomination for the most original Christmas Card of the year. Campaign banners declare your wishes. In the ballot box slot is a "Christmas Ballot" with your name and a warm greeting to show that you voted for your friend to have Christmas Cheer, Prosperity, etc. Ballots come separate for you to insert. Lithographed in bright Christmas red and green. Snow-white text stock. French-folded to 5"x6½". Tell us how family, first names are to be printed. Prices, including envelopes: 25 for $3.95; 50—$6.95; 75–$9.95; 100–$12.85. Postpaid. Money back guarantee.

ACROSTIC VERSE GREETING

For this Christmas Card, we will write a warm, sincere verse with the initials spelling your own name, just as "THE JOHN WILSONS" is spelled downward in the verse pictured. Tell us your name just as you want it printed, your address for the front cover signboard (or "Christmas 1960" if desired.) Printed in raised frost-white on velvety deep-blue stock. French-folded to 4¼"x 5½", opening to 5½"x8½". 25 Cards with envelopes—$3.45. 50—$5.95. 100—$10.95. Postpaid. Money-back guarantee. Order No. 49

YOUR OWN HOME GREETING

A Christmas Card with an artist's sketch of your own home. Send us a clear negative or photo of your home just as you want it to appear. We'll sketch it and print it lithographically on your cards. Tell us your name, address and first names to be printed inside. The cover and the band along the bottom inside in bright Christmas red. The sketch is in black for a natural effect. The distinctive gatefold card measures 5"x6½" opening to 13" wide. White card weight paper. 50 Cards and envelopes $12.95; 75 Cards--$17.95; 100 Cards—$22.90 Postpaid Order No. 50.

will wear out before carpet made with NYLON 22†

the NYLON that fortifies wool!

Fantastic—the extra wear-strength NYLON 22 adds to wool! By every known test, so called five adds more wear to wool. Created exclusively for carpets, NYLON 22 is the strongest staple fiber in carpets today. Now, the same money buys you extra years of wear. Plus these other NYLON 22 extras: Magnificent color variety and brilliance! Extraordinary crush resistance! Superb cleanability! Compared for wear or worth, a 50% nylon, 50% wool blend, makes a better carpet to sink your money or your feet into!

See proof for yourself! Authentic photos of identical carpets (except for fiber content) placed on heavily traveled stairs at a subway entrance, and deliberately given more wear than your carpet will ever get!

100% wool carpeting pile is totally worn out after 70,400 footsteps on heavily traveled stairs at a subway entrance, worn down almost to the backing!

Help means life itself

Park In Sun, Korean, age 5. Parents refugees from north. Father now dead. Two other children. Family lives in shack. Mother earns $3.00 per month. Child always hungry, sad. Has no clothes for Korean winter. Situation desperate. Mother despairing. Help to Sun means life to whole family. Will keep family unit together. Help urgent.

You alone, or as a member of a group, can help these children by becoming a Foster Parent. You will be sent the case history and photograph of your child upon receipt of application with initial payment. Your child is told that you are his or her Foster Parent. At once the child is touched by love and a sense of belonging. All correspondence is through our office, and is translated and encouraged. We do no mass relief. Each child, treated as an individual, receives a monthly cash grant of eight dollars plus food, clothing, shelter, education and medical care according to his or her needs. Your help is vital to a child struggling for life. Won't you let some child love you?

Plan is a non-political, non-profit, non-sectarian, government-approved, independent relief organization, helping children, wherever the need—in France, Italy, Greece, South Korea, Viet Nam, and Hong Kong—and is registered under No. VFA019 with the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid of the United States Government and is filed with the National Information Bureau in New York City.

"Don would climb El Yunque for his Aunt Agatha"

—says Joan Bennett, who discovered this no-fuss rum drink in Puerto Rico.

DONALD COOK and I first met Aunt Agatha when we were performing in the San Juan Drama Festival.

Don, who is idle about making cocktails, fell for this rum drink completely.

"No fuss, no nonsense," he puffed as he pulled me up that hill. "That's what I like about Aunt Agatha. And what could be sunnier than orange juice and rum?"

Look at those Aunt Agathas above. You can almost see what Don means.

Our hotel bartender told us the secret of Aunt Agatha's sunny disposition with the pride of a devoted nephew.

"It's all in the brilliant dryness of our rums," he explained. "We distill them at high proof for extra dryness—and age them in oak to ripen their flavor. So always check the bottle label. Be sure it says Puerto Rican Rum."

That technical talk is Greek to me. So it is to Don. But he won't admit it.

AUNT AGATHA

One jigger (1½ oz.) white Puerto Rican rum—plus two jiggers of orange juice. Pour over ice cubes in Old Fashioned glass. Stir. Note: Some people like to add a dash of Angostura or Orange bitters.

Cabinetry by BAKER

CLASSIC PROVINCIAL ACROSONIC Created by the same craftsmen who designed the Baldwin Concert Grand; exquisitely encased in a cabinet styled and hand-crafted by Baker Furniture, Inc. The style is Classic Provincial, as enduring as the full singing tone of the Acrosonic itself. The wood is American Walnut, long favored for its glowing depth and for the delicacy of its grain. Shadows and subtle shadings of color enhance the mellow "lived with" look of its rich antique patina finish. See and hear it at your Baldwin dealer soon.
